Written for the Patriot. THE FALLACY OF HOPE.

Hope, on thought's light pinion, loves to fly to the haven in which our brightest anticipations are anchored; yet many a time, and oft when we trusted its fond delusions most, have we found ourselves wrecked on the strands of despair.

True, we may for a while brood o'er " memory's buried flowers," but soon the past is hurled into Oblivion's gulf, and the bright and cheering anticipations of the unattained future hold empire over our thoughts. Yet, oh! how very soon its promised pleasures prove a mockery, and geance upon an aggressive foe. we are doomed to see

Number 1,278.

Father in Heaven! Thine is the power, To bless in every land and hour; Then hear my heart's deep bursting prayer, And shield the precious prisoners there. When the days grow bleak and cold, A mantle of mercy round them fold; Let their hearts be warm and cheery, On Johnson's Island in Lake Erie.

'Mong those " heroes in the strife," For Southern land and Southern life, One darling heart alone Throbs with the blood that stirs my own : Yet for all I bend my knee In fervent prayer oh! God to Thee; Keep their lives from being weary On Johnson's Island in Lake Erie.

A sacred cause they have espoused, The best that's in them is aroused; Deeply their noble souls revere Thee, oh ! God, and country dear ; Then let them live to see at last The victory won, the struggle past-Bring them through their bondage dreary, On Johnson's Island in Lake Erie.

A thousand hopes are to them bound, A thousand hearts they cluster round ; Affection drops for them a tear. And for their safety stands in fear. Oh! free them from the captor's hand, And let us greet in Southern land The prisoners, with a welcome merry, From Johnson's Island in Lake Erie.

O, ask not wealth :

FOR EVERY ONE THAT ASKETH RECEIV

The gaudy bauble glitters to deceive; It hath a thorn to press thee when asleep; It maketh wings, and leaveth thee to weep Ask not what wealth can give.

It kills his hero, and then haunts his tomb, Where all his triumphs fail.

O, ask not love; "The fond heart's idol breaketh the fond heart ; His smile if oft deceitful, and its power Too oft is felt in sorrow's darkest hour ; Ask not his treacherous dart.

"Not even life itself makes good the name" How oft its victim craves the boon of death. When guilt or sorrow yearn to yield the breath ; Ask not the fitful flame.

Ask for a quiet mind;

A heart to bless the Hand that gives it all, That priceless gift of life. Ask for a fount of tears; The heart to sympathize in others' woe. The soul to feel for all the sorrowing here,

And power to point them to a better sphere,

A heart at rest from all the jars of strife :

An humble heart, that never soars to fall

Where tears can never flow. Ask for a broken heart, A grief for all the ills thy hand has done A pung for wasted life, for useless breath A hope that triumphs o'er the fear of death. Ask, and the goal is won.
