Rules for Highways.

(Country Gentleman.) We are of the firm conviction that for the man who wants to make a home in this State, it is necessary that he should have a good road.

1. Remove all loose stones from the road, and all loose stones from the road, and all loose stones from the road.

2. Where fixed stones cannot be removed, cover them well with gravel or other road material.

3. Never make a highway of mud, and of soft material, and of mud, and of soft material, and of mud.

4. Where the road bed has not a dry bottom cut a ditch in the middle three feet deep, and lengthwise with the road.

5. Plant shade trees three or four rods apart along the line, to allow air to circulate, sun to shine, and shade to be had.

6. Keep the roadside smooth, and the grass for hay, and this will secure a good track when the center of the road is encumbered with impassible snow drifts in winter.

7. I windy places make the windward side of the road, and the windward side of the road, and the windward side of the road.

8. Never drive horses across a railway without first looking both ways, or in the dark, without listening. It is better to take this care than to be killed by a locomotive once in his neglect.

9. Never keep a noisy, barking dog, to bark at quiet passengers or passing teams, to terrify horses and cause them to run away, upset cars, or to do any other mischief.

10. A little Boston boy, aged six, is of a very imaginative temperament. Quite recently his mother noticed that at bedtime each night he laid his hands together on their sides, instead of settling them upright.

"Pray tell me why you always lay your hands together?" said mamma; and the child replied: "Because they get tired walking so much all day; I lay them sideways so that they can rest."
