TOBACCO CULTURE.

The variety of seed recommended is the Yellow Orinoco. The quantity sown should be one and a half table-spoonfuls to every 100 square yards. Great care should be taken to sow the seed as regularly as possible so as to prevent some spots from being too thin and what is worse, other spots from being too thick. To do so the seed should be carefully measured and then thoroughly mixed in a convenient quantity of dry ashes, and then the mixture divided into two equal parts. The bed should be marked off into convenient sowing breadths by lines four feet apart, and sowed entirely over in one direction, and then over again with the other half in the opposite direction, the sower retracing his steps. The seed should be left on the surface and neither hoed or raked into the soil, but trodden in with the foot, or pressed in with the back of a weeding hoe, or better still, by passing a light roller over the bed. To prevent drifting or padding of the seed by washing rains, where the ground is rolling, trenches slightly inclined and two inches deep and four feet apart should be made with the mattock across the bed. Where the ground is flat and subject to being subbed, it should be thoroughly drained, as nothing drowns more easily than the tobacco plant.

For the three-fold purpose of warmth, moisture and fertility, the bed should be top dressed with a covering half inch thick of good stable manure broken up, the fresher the better, but in case free of grass seed. When such stable manure is not convenient, that from the hen house or hog pen will answer, top-dressing. If neither of these is at hand, some strongly ammoniated fertilizer should be applied at the rate of half bushel of it to every 100 square yards, and raked into the soil before seeding. The bed should now be thickly covered with fine brush to prevent both drying and freezing of the soil, by which the plants are either checked in their growth or killed out by the roots.

The next thing to be thought of is to guard against the ravages of the tobacco bug, an insect which by a popular misnomer is called "The Fly," which makes its appearance about the first of April, and for which when once it gets possession of a plant-bed, no remedy has yet been found. None of the insect poisons, such as carbolic acid or kerosene oil, have any effect upon it. A partial preventive is to sow the borders of the bed thickly with black mustard. It springs up thickly, and upon it this bug loves to feed. A still better preventive is to shut the bug out by a fence around the bed one foot high, built of 12 inch plank nailed to pegs driven in the ground, with a little earth pressed against the bottom of the planks so as to make the fence bug proof. Such a fence or cold frame does the additional good of keeping the bed warmer and moister and should never be omitted.

Ordinarily and after early seeding the plants will begin to show themselves about the first of March, at which time an additional half spoonful of seed for every 100 square yards, should be sown as at first. So soon as the plants are well up and have begun to grow, they should be pushed as rapidly as possible by top-dressing the bed before each successive rain with some good fertilizer, at the rate of one gallon of it to every 100 square yards, mixed with an equal quantity of damp earth. The fertilizer should never be applied while the plants are wet with either dew or rain, for fear of scalding them. Dry leaves and young grass should be hand-picked off the bed. But the covering of brush should not be permanently removed until the plants are nearly large enough to set, but should then be, in order to toughen them. And after it has been removed, and while waiting for a season to transplant, should the plants begin to parch from draught, the bed should be well watered and again covered with green boughs laid upon a scaffolding two or three feet above the growing plants. I have never known this protection to fail in even the severest drought. But after a rain this shelter should be removed in order to accustom the plants to the heat of the sun.
