The Roses by The Run.

The roses by the run Are very sweet and fair, And I love the fragrant odors They breathe upon the air. But woe betide the blossom Beside the meadow run, The time that you were twenty, And I was twenty-one.

How fondly I remember The time we culled them there, And 'neath the shady maples I wove them in your hair; How then in bliss we tarried Until the set of sun, The time that you were twenty And I was twenty-one.

It may have been the flowers, Perhaps a look from the, That made me whisper softly How dear thou wert to me; I never stopped to question, I only know 'twas done, The time that you were twenty And I was twenty-one.

We've had our summer, darling, The fields of life are brown, We've traveled up the hillside, We're on our journey down; Yet of I wake from dreaming Those days have just begun— That you again are twenty And I am twenty-one.

When life and love are over, And I am laid at rest, I hope some one will gather And place upon my breast Such flowers as used to blossom Beside the meadow run, The time that you were twenty And I were twenty-one.

VANDERBILT'S PALACE.

Asheville Will Have the Finest Residence in the South.

Raleigh Call.

With that sagacity and forethought and refinement which has characterized the business life of this money king, Mr. Vanderbilt planned and executed his purpose to build up the most attractive, elegant and charming country-seat to be found, perhaps, in all the world. First, he secured an eminence on which to build, which overlooks the lovely valleys of the French Broad and Swannanoa rivers, from which a sweep of vision in all directions, for miles and miles away, catches scenes of picturesque beauty and loveliness, on which the unwary eye longingly lingers and fasts—always wondering, never tiring. Next, to carry out his princely design, he must have a broad domain for drives, summer villas and parks, &c., &c., and he has added, so the Call learns, to the original purchase until now he owns about four thousand acres, extending along the road towards Hendersonville on the one side, and embracing the valley of the French Broad for quite a distance on the other.

The Call is further advised that his architect has completed the design for this grand palatial residence. It is to be three hundred feet in length, with gorgeous parlors and reception rooms, elegant sleeping apartments, superb suits and baths, delightful promenades and verandas, charming observatories, ball rooms, limped fountains and conservatories of rarest and richest flowers—in short, all comforts and appointments that may be had by the expenditure of one million of dollars—the amount decided upon as necessary to meet his wish. He is now negotiating for an additional seven hundred and fifty acres for which he will be required to pay one hundred thousand dollars—the price of the property having advanced three hundred per cent. within the past hundred days. A princely conception of a princely home to be located in full view of the lovely city of Asheville! Her good people are to be congratulated.

What the South Needs.

Two things are needed in the South to make it as prosperous and wealthy as the North. They are self reliance and money. The one we can get by simply making up our minds no longer to depend upon others. The struggle the men of the South went through from 1865 until after the reconstruction days were over, shows that they are people of great will power and energy. If they make up their minds no longer to be dependent upon the New England factories and the Western smoke houses and corn cribs they will stick to the determination. When this is done they will have accomplished a great deal toward making their section the wealthiest part of the Union.

In addition to this they need money. Money is scarce here. It is plentiful at the North. Measures should be adopted to induce that money to come here. The great drawback to capital coming South has been want of confidence on the part of Northern men of money in the security Southern investments offered. Northern capitalists prefer to invest their money at the North on what they consider perfect security, at a rate of interest as low as four and even two and a half per cent. sending it South where it can earn a great deal more. Of course then the thing for Southern men to do is to overcome this prejudice or fear, and show to these capitalists that their money can be as securely invested here at six per cent. as it can at the North at much lower rates. When this is done to the extent that the South can get all the money needed to develop her resources and mature her industries, then will she be truly prosperous and wealthy.

We are glad to see that this want of confidence in Southern investments is decreasing year by year, and that Northern money is coming South in increasing quantities. If the Southerners act well their part, and do nothing to stop this, but exert themselves to increase it, they will soon be living in the garden spot of the Union.

Senator Vance's Eyesight.

News-Observer.

A good deal has been said of late about the probability of Senator Vance losing his remaining eye, and consequently being totally blind. If there is any likelihood of such a misfortune overtaking the Senator, now where would it be more generally and deeply regretted than by the people of his own State. There is no reason to believe, however, that anything of the kind is at all probable. Senator Vance himself denies its truthfulness, and the eye that was taken out was removed, it is known, by the advice of his physicians in order that its weakness might not effect in any way the strength of sight of the remaining one. The strong fight that Senator Vance made against the Senate substitute for the Mills tariff bill during the last days of the Fifteenth Congress no doubt had considerable to do with increasing the weakness of his lost eye.

Together with Senator Vest, of Missouri, he was at his desk constantly from the time the bill came up for discussion until it was put upon its final passage; and if exhibiting the gross injustice and inequality of the measure could have had any effect upon the votes of the Republican majority the bill would never have passed even the Senate. As it is, however, his speeches constitute a strong and valuable presentation of the views of the Democratic party upon a question which is likely to agitate the country for years to come.

For Senator Vance to lose his remaining eye would be not only a great personal calamity to himself but a misfortune that would be felt by the Democratic party at large as well as by the people of our own State. It is a pleasure to know, consequently, that there is no truth in the report, and that his usefulness is likely to continue unimpaired for many years to come.

The Practical Farmer.

(Practical Farmer.)

A man on his own farm, well cultivated and kept, well stocked, with good modern dwellings and barns and out-buildings, master of both time and money, free to come and go according to the necessities of none but himself, mostly in his own fields, performing his healthful labors within sight of the smoke of his own chimneys is surely as rich in the genuine sense of that word as any man can be. He has nothing to fear and nobody to envy. Of one thing he is sure of without a single pang of doubt or apprehension. There is his land; there is his home; there is all the animate and inanimate machinery of the establishment; and for the rest he looks in profound trust to the bounty of heaven.

Instead of this unworthy and demoralizing anxiety to get rich, if the average farmer, once being solidly established, would resolve to enlarge and exult his life as it is, to make more out of that, to enjoy as much as possible of what there is to be enjoyed, to adorn and beautify his home—that only paradise on earth—within and without, he would find all his daily tasks easier, even to the extent of being delightful; he would feel rich where now, with more money, he feels all the time poor, and rid himself of a false tyrant in the form of increasing parsimony that holds his nose to the grindstone until he is flung into his grave. If farmers only knew it they would be the richest men on earth.

She glided into the office and quietly approached the editor's desk.

"I have written a poem—," she began.

"Well!" exclaimed the editor with a look and tone intended to annihilate, but she wouldn't annihilate worth a cent, and resumed:

"I have written a poem on 'My father's Barn'—"

"Oh!" interrupted the editor with extraordinary suavity, "you don't know how relieved I feel. A poem written on your father's barn, eh? I was afraid it was written on paper and that you wanted me to publish it. If I should ever happen to drive past your father's barn I'll stop and read the poem. Good afternoon, Miss."—Ex.

A Small Farm the Best.

No farmer with small capital should over burden himself with a large amount of land. As he can by his own labor bring a few acres to a high state of cultivation with a little expenditure of money. This will pay better than half working more land and getting a smaller crop per acre, hiring help to cultivate and harvest it besides paying interest on the large area that has thus been cultivated at a loss. It is the great mistake of small farmers to suppose that their land is too small in acre to cultivate with profit. Those who think thus often purchase neighboring farms with the notion that thus they can help themselves out. 9 times in 10 these efforts result in worse failure than would have followed concentration of effort on the original number of acres. There is an unfounded prejudice among all Anglo-Saxons against selling part of their farm. If it is more than can be worked with profit sell until it becomes adapted to the owner's capital and executive ability. A small farm paid for and well tilled makes a perfect home. When its capabilities are thoroughly tested, the owner may be surprised to learn that it requires whatever executive force he can command to manage it.—Ex.

A SCRAP OF PAPER SAVED HER LIFE.

It was just an ordinary scrap of wrapping paper, but it saved her life. She was in the last stages of consumption, told by physicians she was incurable and could only live but a short time; she weighed less than seventy pounds. On a piece of wrapping paper she read of Dr. King's New Discovery, and got a sample bottle; it helped her, she bought a large bottle it helped her more, bought another and grew better fast, continued its use and is now strong, healthy, rosy-plumaged, weighing 140 pounds. JEFFERSON DAVIS' ROMANCE.

THE STRATEGEM BY WHICH HE SECURED A BRIDE WHEN A YOUNG LIEUTENANT.

Philadelphia News.

The first marriage of Jefferson Davis was of a somewhat romantic character. After graduating at West Point he was ordered to Fort Crawford at Prairie du Chien, Wis. The post then was commanded by Col. Zachary Taylor. The daughter of the latter, Miss Sallie Knox Taylor, at once fell desperately in love with the handsome and intellectual young lieutenant, and the affection was reciprocated, but the old Colonel was averse to any match making under the circumstances and peremptorily forbade Davis from visiting his quarters except in an official capacity. The lovers managed to see each other by stratagem, however, and one morning at daylight they were missing. The household was instantly aroused, the servants interrogated and a search made, but nothing was elicited save that the door of the stable was open and four horses gone and their tracks indicated a hasty departure. Further examination of the premises showed that Lieutenant George Wilson, brother of Thomas S. Wilson, of Dubuque, Ia., and Miss Street, daughter of Gen. Street, had likewise suddenly disappeared. There was but one conclusion, and in less than an hour every man, woman and child in the village knew all about the runaway match.

Col. Taylor was enraged and declared in an oath as strong as he ever used, that under no circumstances would he forgive Davis or become reconciled to his daughter's disobedience. Sixteen years passed. "Old Zach" was in command of the United States Army in Mexico, and serving under him was Col. Jefferson Davis at the head of the famous First Mississippi Rifles. At the battle of Buena Vista the Regiment covered itself with glory, but Davis, while leading one of his charges at a critical moment, fell severely, and it was supposed mortally wounded. He was borne from the field and that evening G. N. Taylor, mounted on Old Whitney, paid him a visit. Dismounting, he stepped to the Colonel's cot and extending his hand.

"Jeff," he said, "you have saved the day with your glorious ride; now let bygones be bygones; Knox (the name by which he always called his daughter) knew your worth and metal better than I did."

From that moment, through the war, indeed until the death of President Taylor, the warmest friendship existed between the old companions in arms.

For Round Shoulders.

I have seen a stooping figure and a halting gait, accompanied by the unavoidable weakness of lungs incidental to a narrow chest, entirely cured by the very simple and easily performed exercises of raising one's self upon the toes leisurely in a perpendicular several times daily. To take this exercise properly one must take a perfect position, with the heels together and the toes at an angle of 45°. Then drop the arms lifelessly by the sides, animating and raising the chest to its full capacity muscularly, the chin being well drawn in and the crown of the head feeling, as our professor used to put it, as if attached to a string suspended from the ceiling above. Slowly rise upon the balls of both feet to the greatest possible height, thereby exercising all the muscles of the legs and body, come again into the standing position without swaying the body backward out of the perfect line. Repeat the same exercise, first on one foot then on the other. It is wonderful what a straightening out power this exercise has upon the shoulders and crooked back, and one will be surprised to note how soon the lungs begin to show the effect of such expansive development.—Fayetteville Observer.

Wanted to Jine.

While waiting at a station in South Carolina one day I was joined by a man who carried an old-fashioned satchel on his shoulder, and who had evidently walked many miles through the mud. He was fully 60 years of age, scrawny and homely, and he simply nodded to me and sat down on a bale of cotton. In about ten minutes along came a woman in home-spun, fully his age and about as homely. She nodded to me and sat down on another cotton bale. Not a word was said between us for ten minutes. Then as the whistle of the train was heard in the distance she said to the man:

"Then, Jim, you ar gwine off ter jine the Mormose?"

"I am, Hannah," he replied.

"And won't you take me?"

"No."

"And I'm to be left?"

"Yes."

"And it won't do no good to argify?"

"Not a bit."

"Wall, then, good-bye to you."

She started forward with extended arm, but passed his hand and seized the satchel and flung it thirty feet away. Then she grabbed him by the hair and they went off the platform into a mud-hole together, and as the train moved away she was on top and jamming his head into the old-gold soil and saying between the jams:

"Want to jine the Mormose do you? Want to leave the old wife who's dum lived with you forty years? Want to jine—jine—jine, you old rabbit, you?"

And fifty passengers gave her three cheers and a tiger as she got a new hold on his patriarchal whiskers.—Detroit Free Press.

service through examinations open to Democrats and Republicans alike. Their fitness was approved by the only test known to the law. Their moral and legal claim to retention in office on a change of administration was therefore much stronger than that of the 15,000 unexamined persons whom Mr. Cleveland retained. Yet it is this democratic minority of the subordinate officers who are now being dismissed in increasing numbers. Mr. Harrison's promise was not only to maintain the observance of the civil service law, but to extend it. It is to be hoped that the promise will not be forgotten.

Physician's Confess.

All honest, conscientious physician who give B. B. B. (Cottrell's Blood Balm, a trial), frankly admit its superiority over all other blood medicines. Dr. W. J. Adair, Rockmart, Ga., writes: "I regard B. B. B. as one of the best blood medicines."

Dr. A. H. Rescoe, Nashville, Tenn., writes: "All reports of B. B. B. are favorable, and its speedy action is truly wonderful."

Dr. J. W. Rhodes, Crawfordville, Ga., writes: "I confess B. B. B. is the best and quickest medicine for rheumatism I have ever tried."

Dr. S. J. Farmer, Crawfordville, Ga., writes: "I cheerfully recommend B. B. B. as a fine tonic alternative. It is used in an extreme case of the neck after other remedies effected no perceptible good."

Dr. C. H. Montgomery, Jacksonville, Ala., writes: "My mother insisted on getting B. B. B. for her rheumatism, in her case, subterfuge resisted the usual remedies. She experienced immediate relief and her improvement has been truly wonderful."

A prominent physician who wishes his name not given says: "A patient of mine whose case of tertiary syphilis was surely killing him, and which no treatment seemed to check, was entirely cured with about twelve bottles of B. B. B. He was fairly made up of skin and bones and truly the ulcers."

It is estimated that there are now nearly fifty thousand people in Oklahoma struggling for existence, and thousands of them are nearly starved.

Their Two Views.

The Baltimore Sun and other leading advocates of civil service Reform are beginning to show distress over President Harrison's attitude toward their doctrine. The Sun says:

The Sun has accordingly held that the 15,000 persons subject to the law who were in office when the law took effect should have their fitness attested by the same examinations employed to test the fitness of new candidates for appointment. This would be secured the explicit object of the law, which is to have the service represented in fair proportions of the different shades of political opinion in the country. This view of the matter was not, however, Mr. Cleveland's view, and at the close of his term the number of Republicans in Federal offices at Washington was vastly greater than the number of Democrats. The latter had out-
