SEARCHING FOR THE BODY. They were not long in finding it, and bringing it ashore. When the body was found, the boys claim, the pulse was still beating, and they believe they could have saved him if they had known how to begin about it. They claim that in twenty minutes after they first saw the man go in the water, they had him ashore.

When they got him to the bank, they pulled his body upon dry land with his head elevated leaving his feet slightly in the water. His body remained warm for several hours afterwards. They came to the city and notified the coroner, Mr. W. C. Campbell, who summoned the following jury: A. Her-ron, Henry Moore, L. C. Freeny, R. W. Offut, T. W. Cargile and Turner Arrington.

Mr. Garrett Brown is a prominent and well-known business man of New Orleans and is editor of an insurance journal published in that city. Too much praise cannot be bestowed on the little boys, Ailie Reynolds and Willie Auderson, who made such a herole effort to save the unfortunate man's life, and their promptness in re-covering the body. When they got it ashore, some negro Loys who were standing there and had witnessed the drowning, refused to touch the man or in any way assist the little fellows. But they managed, by heroic efforts to get him out of the water.
