An Excursion Boat Incident

"There was 1,500 of us on the steamer St. Johns last Sunday for an excurup the Hudson," said Uncle Silas Bowersox. "There was also a brass band an' a young fellow from Port Jervis who had a strong impression he could sing. As soon as the band stopped he started in without any invitation to entertain the crowd with "Nellie Gray." A party of young chaps sittin' near me took an interest at once in the Port Jervis singer an' remarkin' 'here's a cuekoo, they gathered round him, an listened with much admiration. When he waz through they applauded him like sixty, an' the spokesman of the party shook his hand an' said he had not heard 'Nellie Gray' rendered in such e equisite style since Choppin use to sing at the Third Avenue Theatre. He declared that it was the most symmetrical and soulful voice he had ever heard in this country, and wondered why in the world he did not go on the lyric stage. 'If you don't want to go on the stage,' said the young fellow, 'you ought to be careful an' not let Abbey Gilmore hear you sing or they won't give you a minute's peace until you sign a contract. These men go gallavantin all over Europe, huntin' up beautiful voices, an' they will jump for joy when they find such a magnificent buss right here at Port Jervis.'
'But I am tenor,' said the singer.

'Of course I meant a tenor,' replied the young feller. 'An' its tenors they are crazy for, too. Why, Abbey has just signed a contract with a tenor, in Europe agreein' to pay him $4,000 a night; an' I'll bet a lung he can't sing in the same hall with you. I claim to be a judge of fine singin', an' your performance is so absolutely perfect that I hain't no criticism to offer, unless it is you might sing a trifle louder. But I dare say that there are other critics will say as even that is not necessaay. That, you know, don't animadvertagin' your singin', but is simply a matter of in height. taste as between critics, you under-

"Then they asked him if he could sing 'Where Is My Wanderin' Boy tonight?' an' you bet he gave it to us good and loud. 'While he was single som feller in the crowd yelled out: "Give him more rope!"

"Another fellow got up and said: " 'If this boat's got any fire service I think they ought to get out the hose without any more delay.'

"Then the young blood that was coachin' the Port Jervis song-bird ad dressed the crowd with an injured air that was most affectin':

"'Oh, what a bleedin' shame for you! Here's one of the most excraordinary voices it was ever my lot to hear, an' yet there are people in this crowd as don't seem to get onto its beauties. But how could you be expected to, as I see most of you are from Brooklyn, with here and there a sprinklin' from Hobok-en? If it was a serio-comic in a low dance-hall you would never get done applaudin.' Shame on your vulgar ig-

"Then he got the singer to favor us with another ballad, and he warbled it out louder than ever. Some fellow got up durin' the song an' said:

"'Please pass me a life preserver, an' if I don't get ashore tell my folks it was the best I could do under the circumstances.'

" 'Oh, what an unmitigated outrage,' exclaimed the nightin'gale's new friend. What a disgrace to our boasted culture an' higher civilization.'

"They got him started again an' some other feller, pullin' down a life preserver, started for the rear of the boat, re-

"'Oh, grave, where is thy victory? Oh, death where is thy sting?"
"I tell you what it is," concluded Uncle Silas, "if there happens to be a man on an excursion boat who can sing, you can have fun if you work it

Min to his will

WHILE North Carolina has made gratifying progress in industrial devel-opment she has done it mainly by the efforts and with the money of her own people. Considerable capital has been invested, it is true, by the residents of other States, but it will bear no comparison with the amount invested by our own people. Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee and Texas, which are noted for their progress, have been largely aided in their industrial enterprises by outside capital which there found an inviting field awaiting it; and where it has been well invested. The time will come when capitalists from other sections will turn their attention to North Carolina. where an inviting field is open too, and where it will find a live, progressive people, who, relying upon themselves, have been forcing to the front and keeping well up in the procession.-Wil.
