This child of its father's guilt and its mother's shame hath come from the hand of God, to work in many ways upon her i.eart, who pleads so earnestly, and with such bitterness of spirit, the right to keep her. It was meant for a blessing; for the one blessing of her life! It was meant, doubtless, as the mother herself bath told us, for a retribution Warregand Wakecounties, also the countries, also the too; a torture to be felt at many an unthought of moment: a pang, a sting, an ever recurring agony, in the midst of a troubled joy! Hath she not expressed this thought in the garb of the poor child, so forcibly reminding us of that red symbol which sears her bosom?"

"Well said, again!" cried good Mr. Wilson. "I feared the woman had no better thought than to make a mountebank of her child."

"Oh, not so! not so!" continued Mr. Dimmesdale. "She recognizes, believe me, the solemn miracle which God hath wrought in the existence of that child. And may she feel, too-what, methinks, is the very truth-that this boon was meant, above all things else, to keep the mother's soul alive and to preserve her from blacker depths of sin into which satan might else have sought to plunge her. Therefore it is good for this poor, sinful woman that she bath an infant immortality, a being capable of eternal joy or sorrow, confided to her care, to be trained up by her to righteousness; to remind her at every moment of her fall, but yet to teach her, as it were, by the Creator's sacred pledge, that if she on Manustreet, one door below Eagle | bring the child to heaven the child also will bring its parent thither. CHAPTER VIL

THE LENGTL how, in the crowd that witnessed Hester Prynne's ignominious exposure, stood a man, elderly, travel worn, who, just emerging from the perilous wibicrness. beheld the woman, in whom he hoped to find embodied the warmth and cheerfulness of home, set up as a type of sin before the people. Her matronly fame was trodden under all men's feet. Infancy was babbling around her in the public market place. For her kindred, should the tidings ever reach them, and for the portion with the intimacy and secredness of their previous relationship. Then why--since the choice was with himself-should the individual, whose the the book to gather plants with incorporate and a second second connection with the fallen woman had been the most intimate and surred of them all, come forward to vindicate his claim to an inheritance so little desirable? He resolved not to be pilleried beside her on her pedestal of shame.
