THE LAST MAN.

(BY ANYBODY BUT THOMAS CAMPBELL)
Lines found upon a young gentleman's desk dedicated to "Big Sleeves" and marked "copied."

I dreamed a dream the other night,
When everything was hushed and still
Which made each hair stand up with fright,
Still as a porcupine's last quill.
I thought that ladies' sleeves had grown
To such a vast and monstrous size
That there was room for them alone—
And none for man—beneath the skies.
The heat and every creeping thing
Had died. The flowers bloomed no more;
The grass and tender herbs of spring,
Were withered on the desert shore;
Ten million leagues of biggest sleeves,
Stretched every where—a funeral pall—
And on the earth, and trees and leaves,
The sun's bright rays could never fall.

On Ararat's cloud-curtained peak
The last man stood with pallid face,
Sick, trembling, weary, worn and weak,
Sad remnant of a smothering race.
In vain! alas! poor man! in vain—
His footsteps sought that rest of old
For clouds of sleeves soon filled the plain,
And hid the mountain in their fold.
Still bigger grew those sleeves apace,
Until they reached the summit high
And streamed above the poor man's face
Like snowy banners in the sky.
Then looking o'er the precipice
"Make room for woman's sleeves!" he cried,
And, flinging down the dark abyss
Made room for woman's sleeves and died.

BROKEN HEARTS.

From the New York Herald.
The Lord is high unto them that are of a broken heart—Psalms, xxxiv. 18.
Certainly no one needs the help of the Lord more than these, and it is a great privilege to know that there is somewhere an "everlasting arm" upon which they can certainly rely in time of trouble.

The most discouraging fact in life is that when we call loudest for friends they are not often with in hearing distance. If we are not in want of them they are more numerous than we can count, but when we are sinking beneath the waters and stretch out imploring hands there is no one near to render assistance.

The great sorrow of life must be borne alone, for no one who has not himself, trodden the wine press of a like experience can say the word we need to have said or do the kindly deed we need to have done. This is a mysterious element in God's Providence which it is hard to understand. You may not have company in your Gethsemane, unless it be the companionship of angels and of Him who sends them.

Broken hearts? Are there any? Perhaps not many if the words are used in a literal sense. We may well thank Heaven that it is so. There is a certain buoyancy, a certain lifting power in human nature which makes utter hopelessness impossible except in rare instances. A kind of optimism creeps into the soul just as a child creeps into its weeping mother's arms, and as the child forces a smile from the mother so this dim prophecy that "eventime it shall be light" sends its ray of hope into the darkness that environs us. We find it very difficult to wholly despair, for heart beats have a sort of good cheer in them when the shadows are deepest.

But it is strangely true that there is a very serious significance in the words "broken hearts." Life is sprinkled with disappointments from youth to age. The dreams of earlier times have not come true, and hardly one of us is today either what or where he expected to be. The wedding march has changed into an echo, and its glad vibrations scarcely reach our ears. The riches we longed for have not come, and our ships are still at sea. The plans we made have somehow gone astray, and the children for whom we would have made any sacrifice have been called to heaven. Changes have come like pitiless tornadoes and torn up by the roots many of our most cherished desires. Sickness, struggle, bereavement, poverty, like malignant fairies, have waived their wands over us and we scarcely recognize ourselves. These are stern facts, and they cannot be gainsaid. Look back through the corridor of time and see yourself as you were at twenty. What experiences have you passed through? They have left their mark on your face, in your gait and in your conversation. You have been ploughed, and the furrows tell how deep the plough struck.

What shall we say, then? That there is no God? Nay, rather that there must be a God or matters would not turn out as they have done. Is life so full of bitterness that it is not worth living? Nay, rather life is a painful means to a joyful end. A hard lesson has been set us, and it must be learned. There was never yet a sorrow which was not a stepping stone to a higher thing, and never yet fell a tear which did not bring heaven nearer. It is the evident intention of God that they shall serve these purposes, and the mission of religion is to keep us constantly mindful of that fact.

The sorrowing ones of earth are specially near to the Father, and struggling souls are objects of his special solicitude. It is hard for us to see His face at such times, for our tears are like clouds that hide the sun; but, as the sun is surely behind the clouds, so is His face behind our tears. While it is a solemn and an awful truth perfect sympathy and efficient helpfulness cannot be found elsewhere, it is a glorious certainty that both can be found in Him.

What consolation to know that the almighty is not far off, that He is neither a stranger to our miseries nor indifferent while we fight the good fight? Even when it seems as though He had deserted and left us to our fate, the rustling of His angel's wings may be heard, and the prayer of beseeching faith brings a calm into the soul as though He had whispered, "Peace! Be still!"
Broken hearts! Travellers weary and worn! Sailors clinging desperately to a wreck! Soldiers wounded almost unto death! Homes made desolate by the invasions of death! Sighs borne on every breeze and disappointed hopes scattered as thick "as leaves in Vallombrosa!"
Yes, this is all true. It is the burden we bear—the burden we must bear. But be of good cheer. Heaven, the end of the journey, is not far off. The minarets are glistening in the sunshine, and, once there, all will be peace. If we have the courage to say "Thy will be done" in this life, we shall look back in the next life and see, to our surprise, that all was for the best; that God was with us as we toiled along the upward steep, His arms underneath us, His messengers lifting us over the rough places. We must bear our lot bravely in faith that He is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and by and by there will be great rejoicing.

KEELEY OUTDONE.

A House Cure for Tippling in One Night's Time.

If there is good foundation for the following statement it deserves to be widely known. The extract is taken from the Buffalo Courier.

A man prominent in the affairs of Dunkirk yesterday related the following incident:
"One day, two months after I had signed the pledge, I had a craving for a drink of whiskey so strong that I could see nothing else but drinks about me, and felt as if I must have at least one drink. I told a friend of my state of mind. He said: "You need not drink; I can tell you of a substitute that will stop your discomfort. Get a bowl of ice water and a raw potato, peel it and cut down one end of it to a size convenient to take in the mouth. Dip the potato in the ice water and suck it every time you think you must have the whiskey." I did as he advised.

I took the bowl of ice water and the potato and placed them on a table at the head of my bed and would dip the potato in the water every few moments till I went to sleep. I awoke from my desire to drink whiskey, and have been free from it ever since. That one treatment eradicated my craving for whiskey for all the time that has since elapsed."

The Snake Gave Up and Died.

Atlanta Constitution.
A very large mink was running along the bank of a Georgia creek, when suddenly he stopped, bowed himself up like a cat and began walking around in a circle of eight or ten feet, his eyes glaring and riveted upon some object in the centre of the circle. It was a big moccasin snake, coiled up, brandishing his forked tongue, and his eyes fixed upon his deadly enemy. The mink kept walking around for several minutes, and then, quick as a flash, he made a spring, caught the snake by the neck and then the battle began in earnest. The snake made desperate attempts to encircle the mink within the folds of his coil. Suddenly the mink let go, and skipping off about the same distance from the foe began circling around again. This process was repeated three times, and then the snake gave up and died. After resting awhile, the mink seized the snake and started to draw it down the bank, when the man who had been watching the combat from the opposite bank appeared and frightened the animal away.

Why He is "Cheeky"

Fort Mill Times.
The poor editor, he racks his brain in every imaginable way, stirs up his thinking faculties, jogs his memory, exercises his patience, curbs his temper, strains and tries to purify his thoughts, so as to make them pleasant for his readers; wears his old clothes, not from choice, neither Polley; but from necessity; stands by his people, not because it's so brave but because it's his duty; chronicles the good traits of his people; tries to hide the bad ones; loves to be an advantage to the community in which he resides; contributes to all charitable institutions and does all in his power to be of value to all, but alas! he's born of a woman and is given to mistakes. He starts out to win the prize found in journalism, and behold he is disappointed, and receives as reward "criticisms." He proceeds to solicit subscribers, but his foot and hope slips and down comes his courage—he is disheartened.

He attends picnics and becomes fonder and is called a glutton.
His next issue comes out and he expects to be congratulated on his report but see again, he has failed to mention some one who had taken part in the affair.

He apologizes next time and is censured and if he doesn't he's a num-skull and an ignoramus.
If he's a single man and is traveling in the interest of his paper, they say "he's sparking."

If he calls on a young lady a time or two "he is courting."
If the other fellow gets the drop on him, it is whispered throughout the community.

If he's out until 11 p. m. the hotelier reports him.
If he goes to preaching, it's said: "he goes to see some girl."

If he visits a circus they say he resembles the monkey.
If he goes to an adjoining town they said he had to walk.

In fact, they tell everything they know on him and exhaust their manufacturing capabilities, and then defy him to say a "word" in defense. That's what necessitates an editor's having the cheek of a brass monkey—he becomes hardened.

Electricity as a Haircutter.

Two striking proofs of the eagerness of the public to avail itself of any electrical improvement were recently afforded. An electrical journal published an article on a comb, which, when passed through the hair, would cut it and singe it at the same instant, by means of the contact of a platinum wire stretched across it, to which current could be admitted on pressure of a button to the other end of the comb. As a direct result of this article the manufacturers of the device received 372 letters and 84 posts, and their gross sales in a little over a month were nearly $4,000. In regard to a device for generating electricity direct from coal, which was described in another journal, the inventor had 800 letters.—Ex.
