THE OLD NORTH STATE FOREVER.

JUDGE WILLIAM GASTON.
Carolina! Carolina! Heaven's blessings attend her!
While we live we will cheer, protect and defend her.
Though the scorner may sneer at and wile us, we'll cheer her.
Our hearts swell with gladness whenever we hear her.
Hurrah! Hurrah! the good Old North State forever!
Hurrah! Hurrah! the good Old North State forever!

ASSOCIATES AND INTIMACIES.

A Young Man is Generally Judged by the Company he Keeps.
Goldsboro Headlight.

In our fond attachment to the idea of independence we forget how very little there really is of it in the world. Boast as we may of being self-centered and free from control, there is not one among us who is not dependent upon others for much that he has, and is and does. Especially is this true as regards character and conduct. Those with whom we mingle are constantly moulding us into mental and moral forms resembling their own, and no possible effort or determination on our part can prevent it. It is true that each individuality is separate and different from all others, but all are being insensibly modified by their associations with each other.

There are different degrees of this influence. Some persons are very susceptible. They take the form of every pressure as wax takes the form of the seal. Others are more original and less mobile; yet, as even the rock cannot resist the constant action of the waves, neither can they wholly resist the perpetual influence of their fellow-men. It is true that occasionally one arises who seems to be so strong and self-poised that, while working powerfully upon the community in some direction, he receives but little impression from them in return. He carries all before him, but is not himself carried by any one. But this is the great exception. Most of us are hourly being worked upon and moulded by those with whom we mingle, while we in turn are modifying and changing them by the same silent influence.

Much of this process is beyond our control. We find ourselves in circumstances which we have not made, and surrounded by influences which we have not selected. Our nation, our city, our business, our relationship are fashioning us, with or without our consent. Still, the strongest influence of all is one over which we may have much control. This is the one that comes from our chosen friends and intimates. Out of the large number of people who are acting upon us, we usually draw to ourselves a few who, from sympathy of taste, or interest or aim, become closely allied to us. We naturally grow fond of them, cherish their society and admit them to our confidence. Insensibly, but surely, we become assimilated to them. Their thoughts, their opinions, their standards, their manners and morals, all modify ours to a much greater degree than we suppose possible.

It is truly said that "a man is known by the company he keeps," for he grows more and more into their likeness, and the change is irresistible. Now, while much of our social and business intercourse is marked out for us by circumstances, our intimacies are certainly within our choice, and we are responsible for whatever influence they exert upon our character. Of the multitudes that surround us, and with whom we rightly maintain civil and even kindly relations, we can select without any compulsion those whom we welcome to the closer bond of friendship. No accident, no mere circumstances should decide a matter so fraught with important consequences. This responsibility needs to be especially impressed upon the young, and those who have charge of them. Parents often strangely overlook it, and permit as intimate associates for their children those whose character they would be very sorry to see re-duplicated in them. In youth every influence is received most passively, and assimilated most easily. As years pass on principles become fixed and habits formed, giving much power of resistance; but with the young this cannot be. First the parent for the child, and then the youth for himself, proves his character and orders his conduct very largely by the choice of intimate companions. With them he throws off reserve, yields to the pleasure of their society, and gradually comes to partake of their nature. If they are pure-minded, honorable, generous, intelligent, he will grow insensibly to be the same. If they are weak and shallow of doubtful honesty and lax principles, pleasure-seeking and selfish, so must we expect him to become in time.

Very often the blame of misdoing is thrown upon the enticement of an evil companion, but who shall bear the blame of choosing such companionship? We may not be able to resist the effect, but we need not have welcomed the cause. One who goes into a malarial atmosphere and remains there, cannot help taking malaria into his system; but why did he court its baneful influence? So with a poisonous moral atmosphere; we cannot withstand it, but we can and ought to avoid it. Certainly there must be congeniality to make friendship possible. Yet a mutual interest in certain pursuits, or a similarity of opinions, or a unity in certain aims, is not sufficient of itself to warrant that intimacy.

Many parts of our nature need sympathy, but in ministering to them, we must beware of admitting injurious influence upon other parts. It is character that should be the one indispensable foundation of our intimacies; upon that innumerable structures of sympathy and fellow-feeling, of mutual interests and aims, of tenderness and affection may be safely placed. This is not, as may be supposed, a merely self-regarding precaution. It is self-protective, but only in that best sense which alone enables us to be of any value at all to others. He who recklessly injures his health does not thus prove his unselfishness; he simply curtails his powers of doing good, and he who injures his character by welcoming evil influences is thereby inflicting a still greater evil upon the community. To protect our own moral nature from everything which tends to pollute or to lower it, is one efficient means of protecting the morality of society. To welcome those influences which lift us into a higher sphere of intelligence, which give us a loftier standard of virtue, which enrich our hearts and arouse our enthusiasm and enlarge our capacities, is to benefit not only ourselves, but the entire community in which we dwell.

What to Read.
Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.
Read history. It is the story of the progress of human life. It teaches by example and stimulates to endeavor.
Read poetry. It enriches the mind with ideals that may become real.
Read romance. The example of its heroes are an exaltation, and tend to the formation of a noble character.
Read science. It supplies information that equips for usefulness and prevents the triumph of terror.
Read philosophy. It imparts wisdom to understand all things, and fortitude to endure all things.
Read the Bible. It gives promise of the future and strengthens the soul.

SLANDER.

Against slander there is no defense. It starts with a word—with a shrug—with a nod—and very often with a smile. It is a pestilence walking in the darkness, spreading contagion far and wide, which the most wary traveler cannot avoid; it is the heart-searching dagger of the assassin; it is the poisoned arrow whose wounds are incurable; it is the mortal sting of the deadly adder; murder its employment, innocence its prey, and ruin its sport.

The man who at the midnight hour fires the dwelling of another does an injury; he burns the roof, pillar, raiment, the very shelter from the storm and tempest; but he does an injury that can be repaired. The storm may indeed beat and chilling blasts assail, but charity will receive the victim into her dwelling, will give him food to eat and raiment to put on; will timely assist him, raising a roof over the ashes of the old, and will again sit at our fireside and taste the fruit of friendship and home.

But the man who circulates false reports concerning a brother's character, who exposes every act of his life which may be presented to his disadvantage; who goes to this and that brother, tells them he is very tender of his brother's reputation, enjoins upon them the strictest secrecy, and then fills their ears with hearsay and rumors, and, what is worse, leaving them to dwell upon the hints and suggestions of his own busy imagination. The man who thus "flches from another his good name," does him an injustice which neither industry nor charity nor time itself can repair.

The Why of it.
The laws of God are inexorable. For the physical world, as for man, he has established certain great principles which are immutable. When man violates them he invariably pays the penalty, reaping what he has sown. Nature's processes are sometimes slow but the ultimate result is inevitably wrought out. This, however, is not intended for a religious edification, says the Statesville Landmark, but relates to the weather. Thus: Nobody can remember as hot a September as this has been. It set in just where August left off and has even improved upon August's lick. Coming to look back, the heat of the month though extraordinary should not be surprising. Why? Because the country has been behind on heat.

Some weeks ago the Weather Bureau gave out that there was a deficiency in heat up to that date of a great many degrees. This deficiency had to be made up during the year. If the Summer did not even it up the Fall must. And this is the explanation of a phenomenon hot September. It is with the heat as with the rainfall: We are due so much each year and if it does not come at one time it must at another. Those, therefore, who have been sweltering during September in a heat for which July nor August gave an equal, can comfort themselves with the reflection that after all they have gotten only what belonged to them.

People would soon get rich if they got paid for all the useless things they say and do. The revision of the Bible has been completed by the London committee which has been engaged upon the work since 1881. A country cemetery has the following notice over the gate: "Only the dead who live in the parish are buried here."—Philadelphia Ledger. A gentleman who discovered that he was standing on a lady's train had the presence of mind to remark, "Though I may not have the power to draw an angel from the skies, I have pinned one to the earth." The lady excused him.—Kx.

GIVE SUNSHINE IN LIFE.

Goldsboro Headlight.
Many people will keep their pleasant thoughts, and kind words about a person until that person has passed beyond reach of hearing and cheer. Beautiful flowers will then be brought to surround the bier with their fragrance—a loving kindness, to be sure; tender and sympathetic. But how many people go through life with little or no bright, cheerful, encouraging words. He toils hard in lowly obscurity. He gives out his life freely and unostentatiously for another. Far better to let him find the warm breath of your love now while his heart beats and throbs with hope; let him catch some of the perfume of those flowers while he is living; let him hear some kind thought you may think of him; and some encouraging word, which may nerve him to greater and nobler deeds before the pulse is still and the eyes closed forever. Sunshine in life is a great blessing. The clouds are heavy enough. When eternal rest comes, the dead have no need for earthly things.

Among the articles on exhibition at a pure food show in Chicago was a 1,000 pound bar of soap. The Chicago people eat soap to aid digestion and whet the appetite.

VIA THE SEABOARD AIR LINE.

VESTIBULED LIMITED TRAINS
Upon Which no Extra Fare is Charged

Leave Washington, D. C., daily, at 8:40 P. M., upon arrival of the "Congressional Limited" from New York, and reach Atlanta at 4:09 P. M. the next day.
A second train, with through sleeping cars from New York, leaves Washington at 4:30 A. M., arriving at Atlanta 9:30 A. M. the next day.
Both trains leave from the Pennsylvania railroad station and land passengers in the Union Depot at Atlanta—near the Exposition grounds and through passengers via any line are landed.
At Portsmouth and Norfolk, Va., the Seaboard Air Line has other connections equally as important as those at Washington, namely: From New York and Philadelphia, the Cape Charles Route, from Baltimore, the Bay Line steamer, from Washington to Norfolk, and Washington steamer, from New York, the Old Dominion steamship and from Boston and Providence, the Merchants and Miners' Steamships. Close connection is made at the steamer sides with through trains and Pullman Drawing-Room, Buffet Sleeping Cars operated through from Portsmouth to Atlanta without change. Each of these routes takes the passenger via Old Point Comfort and through Hampton Roads.

POINTS OF INTEREST ALONG THE LINE.
The route from Washington is through Fredericksburg, Richmond and Petersburg, Virginia, Weldon, Raleigh and Southern Pines, North Carolina, Chester, Clinton and Abbeville, South Carolina and Eliberton and Athens to Atlanta, Georgia.
