THIS FOR FARMERS.

THE QUESTION OF MANURING CROPS.

How to Save the Manure from the Stable and Barn-yard—Best Methods of Applying it—What Chemicals Pay Best With These Manures—Helpful Hints on Small Fruit Culture, &c., &c.

Editor Farmers' Voice:—By long odds the most important question to every one who tills the soil is that of manure. No matter what he grows, whether it be the gross-est staple or the most delicate fruit or garden-product, his success depends more upon a wise system of manuring than anything else. It is also a question whose importance must increase rather than lessen. For by far the greater part of the agricultural lands of the country are yearly deteriorating, getting poorer under the treatment they get. At the same time competition is getting stronger and the necessity of the use of wisdom and economy in all agricultural methods becoming more imperative.

While my experience has lain mostly in fruit culture, I have for many years grown grain and grass crops as a rotation. My soil runs all the way from extreme sandiness to black muck in one direction and to the closest red clay in another. My experience has covered summers so wet that even grass would not grow, and it has convinced me that the usual methods of crop fertilizing could be greatly improved by following a few simple rules. All stable or barnyard manure should not only be saved, but saved in such a way as to lose no part of its value. Manure in horse stalls I leave untouched till it is hauled out and broadcasted on the land. Cleanliness is preserved by adding bedding as needed. If the stall is dry and enough litter used, the accumulating manure soon packs firm enough to form a good floor, which is yet so absorbent that not the least quantity of liquid manure is lost. Manure saved this way has fully twice the value of that treated in the usual manner. Thorough composting is, of course, excellent. But where one man composts manure properly 20 carelessly throw it out either to heat and fire fang or to be leached by rains, either process rendering it nearly worthless.

Manure from the milk cow stalls, which have to be kept clean, should be composted with kainit or some good absorbent as fast as removed. The barnyard proper should be so arranged and protected from drippings that the accumulating manure will not lose by leaching. Straw or litter of some kind must also be liberally used. But comparatively few farmers depend upon the above manures alone. Most of them buy more or less fertilizer besides. This is all right provided the right system is followed. As far as my observation goes the right system is not generally followed. When fertilizers are used in connection with manure, it should always be as a supplement to that article, and their ingredients should be such as to supply the properties in which the barnyard manure is deficient. Where a moderate quantity of this manure is used in connection with green manuring, (the turning under of rye, peas or clover), little ammonia, (the most expensive ingredient of fertilizers) need be bought. What will be needed will be the comparatively cheap ingredients, potash and phosphoric acid.

Of all soils, and especially on sandy soils, I find potash to be what is most needed and what gives the quickest and largest returns. It is the height of unwisdom to use either stable manure or green manuring without it. One hundred and fifty pounds of kainit or 100 pounds of muriate of potash and 100 pounds of dissolved bone well mixed and sown and mixed with earth in the drill before planting, pays its cost manifold on any crop and on any soil that I have ever tried it. It is also an excellent spring top dressing

For all kinds of grain as well as for grass and clover. It will usually pay to use it much more liberally for this purpose and where no stable manure is used to add one hundred pounds or more of nitrate of soda. Orchards I would plow shallow and top dress with the above in very early spring if not done the fall before. Here but little of the nitrate will usually be needed. For small fruit I would drill in the mixture before planting. I use as much as 500 pounds per acre of it, being careful to mix it well with the soil by means of a light harrow. Where intensive culture is to be followed (and in fruit above all things intensive culture pays) heavy quantities of kainit or muriate of potash or dissolved bone and bone dust can be profitably applied if broadcasted and thoroughly harrowed in. Thus applied 1,000 pounds of kainit (or 250 pounds of muriate of potash) and 500 pounds dissolved bone or bone dust is not excessive. I find it to be also unsurpassed as top dressing for small fruit applied in February or March over plants at the rate per acre of 300 pounds of kainit (or 20 pounds of muriate of potash) and 200 pounds dissolved bone (bone dust is too slow here). The result is not only more fruit, but larger, firmer, better flavored, better colored fruit.

Kittrell, N. C.

Notes For and of The Farmer.

Never keep food before the hens continuously. See that the hens do not suffer in winter from want of gravel. The Pekin duck is the best to keep on farms where there are no ponds. When will eggs be sold by weight? Hogs would as justly be sold by the dozen regardless of size of eggs. Give the poultry a little of the care so freely given to the animals, and it will pay a better percentage on the investment. Finely cut clover steamed or steeped mixed, water and all, with ground grain and fed warm, is a splendid winter ration for fowls. It is a waste of food to fatten to a point where the animal makes but a small daily gain. In fattening animals for market it should be done quickly, and the lot sent to market as soon as they cease to gain in proportion to the food consumed. Every day after that period increases the cost.

Notice to Whom it May Concern.

The taxes levied under schedule "B" in the Revenue Law of North Carolina, chapter 116, ratified the 12th day of March 1895, are license taxes for the privilege of practicing or carrying on the business or occupation therein mentioned. Persons practicing any trade or profession, or doing business taxed by the laws of North Carolina in Franklin County are hereby notified to comply with the requirements of law or they may expect the penalties to be enforced as required of them in section 37. Sections 18-19-20-21-22-23-24-31-34-35, requiring the listing of purchases, gross receipts, commissions, or other property &c., named therein, within the first ten days of January and July of each year, and the receipt for the payment of such taxes, is a license, and authorizes the person or firms to continue business for the next 6 mo. this and those doing business without paying taxes, are doing business without their license, and subject themselves to the penalties imposed in Section 37. The attention of Magistrates, Constables and other county or town officers, are especially called to Sections 23-24-25-27-28 and 37 of this act.
