WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Secretary of the Navy's Government Yacht-Life on the Dolphin. Small Cost to Uncle Sam.

[Special Correspondence.] How much pleasanter is the lot of the secretary of the navy than that of any other member of the cabinet. When the hot weather comes, he gets aboard the yacht which the government furnishes him and cruises along the Atlantic coast, stopping at Bar Harbor and Newport and calling this duty. It really does involve a duty, and Mr. Herbert is fortunate in being able to make duty so pleasant in the heated term. This summer he varied his cruise along the coast with a trip to Europe. Mr. Carlisle, too, has a government yacht whenever he wants it, but Mr. Will practice in all courts. Office in Ford Pathor corner of Main and Nash streets. Carlisle makes no pretense of duty. He simply gets aboard a lighthouse tender or some other government boat and takes his entire family, direct and collateral, on an excursion. For this he has eminent example. The president uses the boats belonging to the treasury department whenever he wants to go on a shooting trip. Only the Expense of the Coal.

These junketing trips of the president and his cabinet officers usually cost the government only the coal used in making steam. Of course the working force on each of the vessels is the same so long as she is in commission. The provisions for the use of the president or the cabinet officer and whatever guests are taken on the cruise are not furnished by the government. Even Secretary Herbert has to stock his own table aboard the Dolphin, which is the secretary's official yacht. If the secretary should go on a short cruise on any other vessel, he would go as the guest of the commanding officer, or, if the vessel was a flagship, of the admiral. These officers would be proud of the privilege of entertaining the secretary of the navy, though, as a rule, officers aboard ship are jealous of their mess and not at all pleased to have a stranger share it. The navy department receives frequent requests from people

CURRENT MISCELLANY. After ordering your bulbs, set about getting a compost ready in which to pot them. As good a soil as any is one composed of ordinary garden loam, sand and well rotted cow manure in equal parts. One-third sand may seem like "too much of a good thing," but it is not. Nowhere in the world are better bulbs grown than in Holland, whose soil is nearly all sand. Better bulbs can be grown in clear sand properly fertilized than in the richest of soils without samd. Mix your compost well and have it fine and yellow. It is very important that the manure should be old. Fresh manure is harmful to all bulbous plants, out or in doors. I should advise the growing of several bulbs in the same pot. The effect is more pleasing because of the greater mass of color in a limited space. Three or four hyacinths, tulips or daffodils may be grown successfully in a 7 inch pot. Half a dozen crocuses or snowdrops will be required to fill a 6 inch pot. Three or four average size bulbs of the Bermuda lily can be grown in a 10 inch pot. --Eben E. Rexford in Ladies' Home Journal.

The Food of School Children.

It is a lamentable fact that too little attention is given to the hygienic surroundings of the pupils in the schools and by far too little to the nature of the food and the manner of eating. The aim often seems to be to so prepare the food that it will require little or no mastication before it is swallowed, and when solid food is ta'... it is no* sufficiently masticated to properly prepare it for the digestive organs. Some years ago a doctor requested m- of his patients to report as to the number of bites it required to masticate different foods. He especially desired to learn how much less children chewed the food before swallowing it than their parents. He got reports from 150 intelligent people and learned that practice in this regard varies very much; that children generally are entirely too apt to bolt their food. To encourage the habit of chewing it more thoroughly he had ad-

Army officers are quite as jealous of their independence in all unofficial matters. When the body of General W. T. Sherman was taken from New York to St. Louis for burial, I was on the train. The trip had been planned by army officers at Governors island, and General O. O. Howard, now retired, was in charge of the arrangements. General war, was one of the party, and he interfered seriously with the arrangements, declining to share a stateroom ing the case, it is only natural that the with General Howard and making himimagination should recoil before at self as unpleasant as he could. All the officers were serious. "Secretary Grant was not invited," they said, "and as this is not a department affair he is

Navy officers have not a great degree of respect for the secretary of the navy, because he is a civilian. But they show him every deference, and a request from the secretary to be allowed to share the officers' mess would be considered a command. It is said that a grain of musk is capable of perfuming for several years a chamber 12 feet square, and that, too, without sustaining any sensible diminution of its volume or weight. Such a chamber would contain 2,985,984 cubic inches of space, each cubic inch containing 1,000 cubic tenths of inches, making in all nearly 3,000,000,000 of cubic tenths of inches. Now, it is probable, indeed almost certain, that each cubic tenth of an inch of the air of such a room contains one or more particles ard Louis A.
