the grace of God and the blunders of the republican party, till the expiration of his term. But how unenviable his position

From henceforth he is a political Ishmaelite, "his hand against every man, and every man's hand against him."

He will be pointed out as Butler the traitor, Butler thr ingrate, Butler the faithless!

Scorned and despised by the brave, and true Democrats of the State, he is the object of pity and contempt to his former allies, the Republicans of North Carolina.

This man once had a brilliant future before him. Had he realized that the old axiom, "Honesty is the best policy," is true in politics as in business, his would have been a high and honorable

But he stooped to trickery and knavery, to soandalous intrigue; yea even to treachery and gross and shameless betrayal of friends.
