THE DIARY ACT.

The Ruise She Adopted to Mislead Her Mamma.

I.—EVENTS AS RECORDED BY HER.

Sunday.—That tiresome Dick Rashleigh was here last night. I thought he never would go. I was awfully bored.

Tuesday.—Dick Rashleigh was here again last night. I wonder why he persists in persecuting me with his attentions. He's dreadfully stupid and as poor as a church mouse, mamma says.

Thursday.—Dick Rashleigh called and though I didn't want to see him the least bit, I went down. He attempted to make love to me, and I sat on him good and hard. As if I would look at him! Why, mamma says I'm sure to make a brilliant match, and if Dick thinks—pshaw, how stupid he is!

Sunday.—Dick tried to kiss me last night, and I threatened to tell mamma if he ever attempted to do such a thing again. I never was so indignant in my life. I could have boxed his ears. I never saw the like of his impudence. I just hate him, and I wish I would never see him again.

Tuesday.—Dick proposed to me last night and I rejected him with scorn. I told him that dear mamma would never, never consent to our marriage, and that anyway I detested him and would not marry him if he were the last man on earth. He said I was cruel and was breaking his heart, and I said I didn't care; that it was a silly presumption on his part to think for one minute that I could care for him when mamma objected to him. I told him to never dare to speak to me of love again.

II.—WHAT WAS REALLY HAPPENING.

"It's all right. Mamma's up stairs reading my diary as usual, and now we can enjoy ourselves. You dear, old boy! I'd be content to sit here on your lap forever with your arm around me and my head on your shoulder. Oh, Dick, how I love you! And isn't that diary scheme great?"—N. Y. Journal.

PEOPLE THINK LIKEWISE DOWN THIS WAY.

Statesville Landmark.

The Landmark printed in a recent issue, an extract from the Charlotte Observer referring to the tender by Gen. Wheeler—commander of Wheeler's cavalry during the late war, now a representative in Congress from Alabama—in the event of war with Spain. The Observer said that the operations of Wheeler's cavalry in Western North Carolina were more disastrous to the Confederacy, in proportion to numbers, than were the enemy—Stoneman's army. An ex-Confederate writes the Observer denying that Wheeler's cavalry were ever in North Carolina with a similar statement from Gen. Wheeler. If this be true there are numerous persons in these parts who have been laboring under a false impression for years. It has always been understood that Wheeler's cavalry were in Western North Carolina during or about the close of the war, and this writer has heard their deprecations condemned ever since he can recollect. A citizen of Iredell, for instance, tells to this day how they encamped on his father's premises and destroyed everything in sight, those about the place receiving worse treatment from them than they did from Stoneman's men. Somebody is badly in error.

Discovered by a Woman.

Another great discovery has been made, and that too, by a lady in the country. "Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She finally discovered a way to recovery, by purchasing of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose, that she slept all night; and with two bottles, has been absolutely cured." Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz. Thus writes W. C. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby, N. C. Trial bottles free at Aycooke & Co.'s drug store. Regular size 50 cents and $1.00. Every bottle guaranteed.

FOR THE WOMEN.

Fashion Notes.

Spring jackets vary in length from the very short, to what is known as the three-quarter length. They are elaborately braided, and the more expensive ones are lined with silk or satin. They have flaring collars, or those that turn over, and have fastenings across the front, made of heavy braid. One very pretty style shows a pattern made of silk braid about half an inch wide. This is shaped into circles, squares, points and curves, and is pressed flat, giving a very pretty effect.

An afternoon dressy costume of a somewhat eccentric, yet popular, style, is made of spotted gauze. The skirt is very full, and has a ruffle at the foot made of the material, hemmed at the upper and lower edges. There is a yoke of elaborate embroidery, from the front of which a wide band of the garniture extends to the ruffles at the hem of the skirt. This band is about four inches wide where it leaves the yoke, and increases in width until it covers the space about twenty inches wide at the bottom. The sleeves are made up of puffs of the spotted fabric. A velvet collar and belt complete this costume.

One of the plainest of costumes is made of camels hair. It has five tucks about a foot from the hem of the skirt, and five more fourteen inches above the first group. The waist has tucks running from the shoulders to the middle of the waist at the belt. The sleeves have tucks at the shoulders, the tucks standing out so as to give the fullness, that appears to most women indispensable.

Yellow and orange are to be among the leading colors of the season. Yellow and black, and orange and black are among the most charming combinations, and becoming to almost every one. If they are not exactly suited, the addition of white lace or chiffon seems to harmonize and soften the effect, and renders them becoming, when otherwise they would scarcely be approved.

A simple dress is of plain, black organdie. The skirt is made with four ruffles of equal width, the upper one being gathered into the belt. The flounces are edged with lace set on perfectly flat. The waist has a yoke of lace over satin, and from this the material is gathered full to the belt; the sleeves are a series of puffs from shoulders to wrists.

Among the novelties in dress goods are those with bayadere, or lengthwise stripes of heavier threads, with the spaces between made of much lighter material. This gives the semi-transparent, gauzy effect, that is most sought after this year.

A novelty Siciliene shows cords and cross-cords outlining squares of thin material. In some of the patterns the thin portion is slightly full, giving the appearance of shir threads, which have drawn the fabric up very slightly.

We can congratulate ourselves on the fact that the enormously wide skirts are a thing of the past, four yards and a half being considered the allowable size at the hem.

Nuns' veillings are shown in the exquisitely fine qualities, and there are canvas goods, with gauze stripes and blocks, that are exceedingly handsome.

A wise man's mistakes are the capital of his experience.

Yellow Jaundice Cured.

Suffering humanity should be supplied with every means possible for its relief. It is with pleasure we publish the following: "This is to certify that I was a terrible sufferer from Yellow Jaundice for over six months, and was treated by some of the best physicians in our city and all to no avail. Dr. Bell, our druggist, recommended Electric Bitters; and after taking two bottles, I was entirely cured. I now take great pleasure in recommending them to any person suffering from this terrible malady. I am gratefully yours, M. A. Hogarty, Lexington, Ky." Sold by Aycooke & Co., druggists.

FARM HINTS.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING ON THE FARM.

Suggestions for Prudent Plowmen.
Philadelphia Record.

Willingness to work is not the only qualification of a good farm hand. The man who is to become a member of the family and a companion for the household should be required first of all to be a man—clean in speech and upright in conduct.

The number of farms on which ice houses are to be found and the ice crop is regularly harvested is increasing as the farmers become better acquainted with the advantages of having a supply in hot weather, and the fact that it can be stored and kept economically.—Farm Journal.

The full streams of spring will wear away much good soil unless the banks are protected. A few posts driven just above the weak points will serve to collect rubbish, and thereby protect the bank. Stick a few willow sprouts along the bank; their roots will hold the soil together, enabling it to resist the encroachments of the water to a remarkable degree.—Rural World.

In all horse feeding the aim is to maintain all force and endurance which the horse already possesses, and to develop these qualities when possible. When it is desired to have a horse increase its weight and size and take on a well rounded appearance it should be done by adding to his muscle rather than to increase greatly the amount of adipose substance.—Maryland Stallion Bulletin.

On most farms in this country either clover, hay or corn stalks will be main ration for foddering farm stock during the winter. These are, everything considered, the cheapest foods that the farm can produce, the advantage of the corn being that it will grow a greater bulk than can be grown of anything else. The clover has an equal advantage in the fact that wherever it is grown the soil is increasing in fertility. It is economy to feed clover and corn stalks together as each will supplement the deficiencies of the other, and more of both will be eaten and digested.

Coarse food is cheap and helps wonderfully, but it must not be depended upon to give good results unless more concentrated articles are added. When feeding any kind of food watch the cows and notice if they are falling off in milk. The way to observe the mode of feeding is to keep an eye on the contents of the milk pail.

The best preventative of rust on implements is kerosene. If cleaned and sponged once a week with kerosene all iron and steel implements will be less liable to rust than when the oils of any kind are used. When stored away for winter a mixture of one part rosin melted in six parts of lard will be found excellent. Early in the spring, if the implements and tools are to be cleaned, it may be done with gasoline and two or three hours after they may be lightly sponged with kerosene.

"THE WORST INVESTMENT."

Under the above caption the New York Sun, of last Friday, had the following strong and suggestive editorial as its leader:

Silently and sincerely, but with persistence, the powerful influence of what is known as the "business interests" has been exerted to deflect the administration from the course as to Cuba which statesmanship marks out for it with singular clearness. The business interests, in which all other things, including political sense particularly, are subordinated to commerce, would prevent the clash of war, or even the diplomatic negotiations that lie on the road to war, at any price. For the United States they would accept the disgrace of Spanish barbarity unmoiled and the Cuban struggle for liberty half-betrayed, and for Spain's torture, they would give the stone of "relief," instead of the bread of armed intervention.

Never were business men more short-sighted. If this government should follow the advice of the business interests and refrain from satisfying the heart-felt longings of the American people and the expectations of other countries that the Cuban war is to be stopped through our agency, it would make the most lamentable business investment ever known. Eventually it would be commercially disastrous beyond measure.

If the Hon. Lyman J. Gage, of Chicago, doesn't think so, he should retire from the cabinet. Whether the Hon. John D. Long, of Hingham, thinks so or not, an appropriate act on his part would be to resign as director of the Peace Society.

Commenting on the above, the Charlotte Observer says:

This is all the more significant from the fact that the Sun abandoned the Democratic party in 1896 and became an ardent supporter of Mr. McKinley for President. Not only so, but it has been one of the ablest and most consistent supporters of his administration. Passing by the question whether the war would be a good business investment—because, as was said in an editorial yesterday, this is too low a plane upon which to pitch the discussion where great considerations are involved—there are two features of this morning's news which give the foregoing article from the Sun the significance referred to above.

1. Betting on the chances of the war began on the New York stock exchange yesterday and odds were given at two to one that there would be no war. This goes to show that the "business interests" of New York, at least, are opposed to war.

2. McKinley wants Congress to hold its hands off for the present and let him see if he cannot secure peace, and relief, afterwards, for the Cuban sufferers by a congressional appropriation to supply their needs.

It looks as if it were a struggle between the "business interests," which do not want war, on the one side, and Congress and the country, which do, on the other, as to which should control the administration in the matter.
