COMPETITION-OPPOSITION.

"In private business compete, In public mattes co-operate." the success of all private ventures and the prosperity of all communities is based foregoing principle. Commenting upon the above the trade when competition is legitimate, came to this country, I went to his hoopen and above board, It brings out the energies and directs the ambitions of our merchants, farmers and manufacturers, it leads to the more careful selection and buying of merchandise; stock and enlarge the varieties of his produce; it compels the na ufacturer to seek new outlets for his wears and improve the methods of creating. All advancement in private business is the result of legitimate competition, which means the spirit to advance one's inerests and not the inclination to push a competitor down hill.

Paradoxical as it may seem, comtition is the surpassing of your neighbor in the marts of trade by conscientious means, and not forcing your friends to the rear by questionable methods, misrepresentations and dishonest scheming.

The advancement of matters of a public nature, such as building schools maintaining churches or the organiz ing of a manufacturing enterprise, calls for the co-operation of the men who are competitors in their private busi ness. The men who compete honestly and conscientiously with their neighbors are the men the community can de pend upon to co-operate when the united efforts of all are required to pro mote the welfare of the community, and at the same time will make any one hustle to keep up with them in the competition for business of an individ ual character.

It is the small-bore man, selfish, unscrupulous and grasping, who dispar ages his neighbors, mistakes opposition for competion and who will never cooperate to advance the welfare of the community which he burdens.
