Replying, Judge De Armond said:

The gentleman from Maine seems to be in the business of making suggestions in regard to "running away," and he seems to suggest that Schley made "the loop" in order to escape danger. The gentleman must have said that without thought.

He did not mean. I think, to make an attack upon Admiral Schley. He did not mean that the man who commanded the American fight, the man who won for America's arms the great victory down at Schley and "the loop!" Let us dwell a moment on that. Let us dwell for a monent on the man who stands in the naval history of this country with reference to these recent events second only to the hero of the battle of Manila Bay. Making a loop to get out of danger! Taking the coward's part! Surely the gentleman from Maine could not have meant that. What he said must have been said in the wild exuberance of his enthusiasm, in the exultation with which he was exploiting something through the feeling upon him of the necessity of magnifying and expanding, because he has too good an intellect to mislead him into the belief that he was really intending to talk so. His intellect is altogether too good for him to have intended to say anything about it.

The gentleman really, I think, made his remark about Schley without thought and without meaning. He did not think, but he talked, and unfortunately he slandered

Mr. Chairman, if all of us could be as safe in history and as prominent in his-with the same candor and the same man-liness that he displayed, and if by any possibility our services to our country could be as valuable and as glorious to all our fellow citizens as his, and if a page of the world's history could be il-lumined by anything which we might do to a thousandth part of the extent to which it has been gloriously illumined by what he did, fortunate indeed would we be. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Maine would do well-not justice to Schley and Schley's record, because Schley my previous letter or in this-rich and racy as they were-was the complete flooring of Mr. Littlefield by John Wesley Gaines, the hard hifter who so ably represents the old "Hermitage district" of Tennessee, where Andrew Jackson sleeps the sicep of the brave and just. Gaines comes from Nashville and in his three terms in congress has become a national figure. Late in the afternoon of June 26 he obtained the floor for five sylnates and started in to make a few genneks about trusts. What he intended to say may never be known, for he had hardly started when Mr. Littlefield interrupted him, very luckily for the Tennesseean, very unfortunately for the man from Maine. John Wesley dropped the trust question to nuawer Littiefield and amid tumnituous applause declared that Littlefield had sought his advice and counsel in preparing the Littlefield antitrust bill and had cabbaged the Gaines autitrust bill, which antedated the Littlefield bill, and incorporated most of it in the latter. Littlefield tried to explain, but John Wesley kept reiterating his charge and the house kept applauding him until Littlefield dropped into his chair, discomfited utterly, and the hammer fell with Gaines master of the field and of Littlefield.
