A great deal is being said about the disappearance of the Populists from congress, and it is assumed that the campaign of 1904 will be fought out by the two old parties, the Democratic and the Republican, without any interference by any third party. Those who make that assumption are also making a great mistake perhaps. Nothing in last year's election was more astonishing than the growth of the Socialistic vote. It may be the controlling factor in 1904 just as the Birney vote defeated Henry Clay in 1844 and the Peter Cooper vote in Oregon in 1876 gave that state to Rutherford B. Hayes, thereby enabling Zach Chandier and other Republican freebooters Jones Tilden by means of the eight to seven commission. There are also signs of a resurrection of the Prohibition party. A recent dispatch from Evansville, Ind., says that the most surprising feature of the spring city elections in Hoosierdom was the large Prohibition vote. In this day of telegraphs and telephones a new party also read out of the party that eminent may grow like Jonah's gourd vine.
