Mother Shipton could have returned from the grave long the most pleasing light: enough to visit Ohio in the recent campaign, she would have taken great credit to herself for her prophecy as to "horseless carriages." They were much in evidence. Two years ago much fun was poked at Tom Johnson by Republican newspapers by reason of the fact that he traveled about in of the fact that he traveled about in to St. Louis. Would you like to go to St. his "Red Devil," as his automobile is Louis? I asked, and he answered, "Pa. named, but this year not only did Tom | repeat that spectacular performance. but so much has public opinion changed on that subject that Hon. Myron T. Herrick, Republican candidate for governor, went gallivanting about the state in an automobile, trying to beat the mayor of Cleveland at his own game. So in that regard Hon. Tom L. has been vindicated. As to automobiles, he can fittingly quote the old dictum that "he laughs best who laughs last." Of course many strange things happened in the Ohio campaign, but certainly the strangest was the attempt of General Charles Dick, chairman of the Republican state committee, to teach Tom Johnson what Thomas Jefferson thought on divers subjects. Since the devil fell to quoting Scripture there hasn't been anything so preposterous. With all due respect to General Dickand personally I have only the kindest feelings for the general-it may be safely asserted that his mind is rigged up on such a plan that he cannot understand what Jeffersen said or wrote. If he could comprehend it he would become a Democrat instanter. The very fact J. Davis, representative of Missouri's that he is still a Republican is proof conclusive that his mind is muddled his mission during the campaign was to expound Jeffersonian Democracy, which he proceeded to do in a way calculated to make the sage of Monticello groan in spirit. The general developed a mania for writing open letters to Tom Johnson, which had about as much effect on that cheerful statesman as pouring water on a duck's back and afforded him an immense fund of amusement. At an early stage in the campaign Tom proposed a joint debate with his opponent, Myron T. Herrick. The latter knows on which side his bread is buttered and declined. not with thanks, but he declined. Then came General Dick and wrote the Cleveland mayor half a dozen long, labored and learned epistles explaining to him that Herrick could not debate with him because Thomas Jefferson said and thought this, that and the other, and thereby General Dick set all mankind possessed of a sense of bumer to laughing at him. The plain truth, which everybody knows, is that Herrick was afraid to debate with Tomand couldn't have been pulled by four mules into the same room with him. So General Dick might as well have saved the wear and tear on his typewriter and at the same time his reputation. Safe to say, his open letters will not be treasured among the valuable documents in the archives of Ohio

Grosvenor, Alias "Elljah" Dowle. Some decidedly amusing things happened in the Ohio campaign. Senator Hanna and Colonel Herrick campaigned together, and they began at sunrise and kept it up till midnight. At Crooksville they slept late, and my venerable and vitriolic friend, General Charles Henry Grosvenor of Athens, was in a great hurry to see them on business of importance. So he thumped on their door vigorously until the drowsy Hanna and Herrick inquired in chorus, "Who's there?" Before General Grosvenor could answer the bell boy yelled, "It's Dowie!" "We haven't any money! Drive him away!" exclaimed the Hanna-Herrick combination, but Grosvenor persisted until he gained entrance and convinced them that it was not "Elliah III," but a tough Republican campaigner. General Grosvenor would have been justified in walloping that bell boy within an inch of his life. He has frequently, been called Santa Claus, but to be mistaken for Dowie is too much for human endurance. Dolliver and "the Immortal J. N." One of the strangest characters in the west is J. N. Free, a tramp editor, known all over the country as "the Immorfal J. N.," a harmless semilunatic, whose specialties are "raising the pressure" and "lifting the veil," whatever those expressions may mean ' He is a thumping big fellow, with fron gray hair falling down over his shoulders. When Senator Dolliver lately spoke at Columbus, by some accident "J. N." occupied a conspicuous position on the stage and attracted about as much attention as the Hawkeye senator. Dolliver took about two hours to expound his views on the tariff, and when he was through people knew about as much as when he began. Then "the Immortal J. N." arose and invited everybody to come to his lecture next night, when he would "lift the vell." supposably from Dolliver's speech. One Touch of Nature.

The newspapers tell that the Danisl people have erected a statue to that fine figure that sprung full armed from Shakespeare's brain (or Bacon's), none other than Hamlet, prince of Denmark People wonder why the Danes should thus seek to honor the memory of one who never trod their soil, who was at best created of the bluest sky and the thinnest air, a creature of the poet's pen and the actor's fancy, and who was made to say things not complimentary to the land where for a stage hour he was a prince and lived and suffered and met his father's ghost, as good princes sometimes do, though the ghost often comes in the "shape abhorred" of one of the old man's credit Hamlet is the mouthpiece for the words, "There's something rotten in the state of Denmark" An American would hardly erect a statue to such a slanderer of his country but perhaps the Danes are well supplied with bronze and have but few heroic characters to counterfeit and place upon a pedestal.

Several years ago the Hon. Wallace great county of Pike in the state legislature, introduced a bill to approprite money to erect a statue to I ers, the hero of a song that has been sung for half a century by Missourians everywhere, having its beginning in the days when thousands of young Missourians been me argonauts and left their homes in search of the golden fleece, going to California in streams by land and sea. Many laughed at the idea, for it has never been thoroughly demonstrated that Joe Bowers ever lived. But Joe Bowers stands for sentiment dear to the hearts of every native son of Missouri, and, like John Brown's soul, it goes marching on Missouri has been a mother to the great west and has peopled it to the tune of Joe Bowers and has yet had time and strength and resource to grow strong and great at home, and one of these days she will "make bare her patriot arm of power" and place a Missouri Democrat in the White House while the bands play "Joe Bowers." Then, I have no doubt, every fellow who wants a fut appointment will be mouthing about the country proposing to erect a statue to Joe Bowers.

Demogratic Prospects. Daily the outlook for Democratic success grows brighter. There has been no political happening in several months past that does not contribute to the strength of the Democrats and to the undoing of the Republicans. Chief among these events we might mention: First.-The Booker

Second.-The scandals in the depart Third.-The unearthing of the mass of official corruption among St. Loui Republican officeholders. Fourth.-The unearthing of corrup tion in nearly all the Republican cities of the country. Fifth.—The fact that the only effective boodle fighting has been done by Missouri Democratic prosecutors, Follows and Crow. Sixth.-The Miller case in the govern ment printing office. "Graft" seems to be the watchwo of the Republican officeholder. If all the facts were known not a single bu reau of any department in Washingto would be found entirely free from A thorough cleaning out is needed, and it will be hard to convince an intell gent man that the party under which the system originated is the proper ope; to exterminate it.
