CHAMP CLARK'S LETTER

Special Washington Letter.
HERETOFORE in these letters I have referred to the fact that the two Kitchin brothers, William W. and Claude, who are both representatives in congress from North Carolina, are among the ablest men in the house.

mission, doing many things it ought not to have done and leaving undone many things that it ought to have done. With the calendar crowded with important bills, with the committee loaded down with others as important, the Republican majority, receding to duty and interested only in escaping from the minority, turned its back and fled. A certain president, nominated here for evermore—once intended a private bill because he had congress on his hands. The Fifty-eighth congress has, no doubt, worried Colonel Roosevelt not a little, but it is now "off his hands" by its own cowardly, of its own motion, at the earliest date for years, and he keeps re-lying till December. Therefore he is probably happy. But what of the people? How do they like to see a Republican congress abandon its post of duty and acquiesce in search of votes in April?

Hearst Versus the Trusts.
Hon. William Randolph Hearst, editor of several great newspapers, representative in congress and candidate for the Democratic nomination for president, manifests an honesty of purpose and a persistency of action most admirable and most unusual in public life. He is not a man who is content with a comfortable position, but he keeps on fighting the trusts—an example which it would be much wiser to imitate than to carp at. Horace Greeley once said, "The way to reform is to reform." Hearst believes that the way to bust trusts is to bust them. He has kept on thumping them. It will be remembered that recently he scored a great triumph over the anthracite coal trust in the supreme court of the United States. Not satisfied with that, on Saturday, April 23, he filed with Mr. Attorney General Knox a complaint alleging that a combination of the Philadelphia and Reading railroad and the Central Railroad of New Jersey, under a common management has shifted competition, and petitioning the court to partition of justice to proceed against them under the Sherman antitrust law. The complaint asks that the action be taken to restrain the Reading company, while the owner of the stock in the Philadelphia and Reading railroad, from owning, holding or voting upon the stock of the Central. It finally that the guilty parties be prosecuted criminally.

Then Kitchin took up the question of lynching and, by reading extracts from Colonel Roosevelt's books, showed that the latter had endorsed lynching as a remedy for horse stealing, or, as the young North Carolina orator put it, "lynching for carrying a ten dollar retail pony"—thus stirring the mentality by lynching much further than has been dreamed in the south, and much more of the same sort. Then, taking for his text "Colonel Roosevelt's declaration that 'a streak of coarse brutality runs through the southern people,'" young Kitchin entered upon a splendid defense of his people, which not only elicited much applause, but brought the moisture to many eyes. To the astonishment of his hearers he dug up a passage from one of Colonel Roosevelt's speeches while he was governor of New York, in which he referred to congress as "cattle," and in which Colonel Roosevelt especially pilloried General Grosvenor, Colonel Hillman and others as champions of "foul politics and dishonest government." Then he entered upon a pretended defense of those "two old gentlemen," as he truly termed them, which made their blood boil. Altogether it was one of the richest oratorical performances witnessed by this congress. When Kitchin had concluded, General Grosvenor rose to reply, but was so angry and the facts were so strong against him that he made a sad mess of it and dropped it readily. He did not sign that Kitchin's bullets had gone to the mark. Colonel Hepburn acted more wisely, slept over the matter and next morning assaulted Kitchin in a speech of great fierceness. He, too, made a poor mess of it. Kitchin got ten minutes and gave both General Grosvenor and Colonel Hepburn a roasting which set the Democrats wild with delight and even forced applause from the Republicans.

A New Figure of Speech.
Hon. Henry D. Clayton, the handsome, genial and very able representative from the Third Alabama district, has invented a brand new figure of speech. The other day when Hon. Clayton was in the midst of his tariff speech and was skillfully bowling over all Republicans who interrupted him Clayton said, sotto voce, "Better let the talking Irishman alone." After Clayton had concluded his oration Clayton what he meant whereupon he replied, "There is an old adage about not monkeying with a buzzsaw while in motion, but a buzzsaw in motion is not half so dangerous as a quick witted Irishman while talking. So my advice to all concerned is not to interrupt a talking Irishman."

Run Away.
The Fifty-eighth congress has adjourned until December. The Republican majority turned its back to duty and ran away, fearful lest the Democratic minority should in some way force them to an investigation of the postoffice department, railroads and other disagreeable tasks. The verdict of the American people will be that the Fifty-eighth congress, Republican in both branches at both the extraordinary and long sessions, was guilty of many sins of both omission and commission.

Ladies and Children.
Why can't you stand the shocking strain of laxative pills and cathartic pills—especially those of the cheap kind? All the people who should take a liver medicine should try these pills. They are the most effective and most pleasant strengthening effect with the nature eating and working condition following the use of other laxative pills. Only Aycock drug co. has them.

BREEDS MOB VIOLENCE.
Responsibility Lies Largely With Tricky and Unscrupulous Lawyers Who Try to, and Often Succeed, in Defeating the Ends of Justice for Personal Notoriety and Gain.
Charles Lee.

One of the members of the Supreme Court of the United States expressed the opinion that the right of appeal in some cases should not be granted, the case specifically being those in which some legal technicality was invoked that had nothing to do with the innocence or guilt of the prisoner.

The case that brings out that opinion which by the way has already been adopted in England, is the case of Alfred Danahy, the member of Senator Simmons' staff. The fact was noted at the time that the Senator, in his more trouble stood for the preservation of law and order and that it was his influence that probably prevented the earlier and more vigorous prosecution of the mob. But the negro had a fair trial, he was abundantly proved and he was sentenced to be hanged. We understand of course that the duty of a lawyer to his client is a very sacred one, especially when that client was as friendless as this negro probably was. But it would seem that there should be drawn somewhere by a lawyer the line between his duty to his client and his obligation to the public peace and welfare. When every other recourse failed the attorney for Danahy goes to the Supreme Court at Washington, with a plea that we shall let the Washington Post describe, making its comment our own.

And now by way of discouraging adherence to ordinary judicial processes, and to the same extent stimulating mob violence this attorney comes to Washington seeking the delay if not the total denial of justice. It is not claimed that the negro is innocent or that he came to open to the consideration of circumstances. The plea is that the jury was composed exclusively of white men! The false and unproved inference sought to be suggested is that of course evidence against a negro is not so reliable as evidence against a white man. It has been more honest and intelligent and virtuous had it been submitted in part or in whole of negroes. And the underlying proposition—equally repellent and preposterous—is that the negro, as such, has an inherent right to representation on the jury box. The negro complies with better veneration when a lawyer or a custom differentiates them from the whites in the matter of social privileges. Now they complain with equal bitterness because the law does not treat them as a race apart when it comes to the dispensing of justice.

Why His Marriage Failed.
He regarded children as a nuisance. He did all his courting before marriage. He asked out money to his wife as if to a beggar. He never had time to go any where with his wife. He never dreamed that there was two sides to marriage. He never dreamed that a wife needs peace or amusements. He thought his wife should spend all her time doing housework. He treated his wife as he would treat a horse that he would not have time to treat another woman.

Do Your Best for Your Child.
Every fair-minded man desires to give to his children and the children of his neighbor better advantages than he himself enjoyed. Wherever good roads make it possible, it is certainly feasible now to substitute for the little school house of one story and one teacher a consolidated school house with half a dozen teachers. The school house of one room and one teacher was good, and we are here in bodily presence to testify to that good, but the consolidated school house of half a dozen rooms and half dozen teachers is vastly superior, and we want to witness that for our children and the children of our neighbor.

General Powell Clayton, American ambassador to Mexico, is threatening to write his autobiography. Truly written, it would make very interesting reading and describe a political modern without a flaw. It would give the youth of the country, who believe in Clayton's dictum that a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches. If the general would write his book without a flaw, it would be a masterpiece. It would tell the best story.

The Battle of Marengo was fought on Friday. The Battle of Bunker Hill was fought on Friday. An Open Letter. From the Chapel Hill News. Early in the spring my wife and I were to see, with our children, the great fair that we called a phantasmagoria. We had heard that his phantasmagoria was the best in the world, and we had heard that it was the best in the world. We had heard that it was the best in the world, and we had heard that it was the best in the world. We had heard that it was the best in the world, and we had heard that it was the best in the world.

My mother has been a sufferer for many years with rheumatism says W. H. Howard of Henderson, N. C. She was unable to move at all while at all times walking was painful I presented her with a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and after a few applications she decided it was the most powerful pain reliever she had ever tried. In fact she is never without it now, and at all times able to walk. I have seen the application of Pain Balm to a woman who had the most terrible rheumatism in her back, and she was able to get up and walk after a few applications.
