Ford

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

The Ford car can well be called the "people's car," because there are more than 3,000,000 of them in daily operation. That is about four to one of the nearest follower in the motor car industry. This would not be so if the Ford car had not for sixteen years proven its superiority in service, in durability, and in the low cost for operation and maintenance; this would not be so if the Ford car was not so easy to understand, so simple in construction that anybody and everybody can safely drive it. Let us have your order for one now to avoid delay in delivery.

FARM STOCK

PLAN OF GRAZING FOR GOATS

Give Vegetation Opportunity to Grow by Dividing Range on Which Animals Forage.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The production of more mohair and meat can be obtained in raising goats on the range by following a plan of grazing which will give the vegetation a chance to grow sufficiently to maintain itself. Most goat ranges are used throughout the year. This and the general practice of driving the goats out from a corral at the ranch headquarters and back every day for a month or throughout the year have been largely responsible for deterioration of the range. An excellent method of giving the forage a proper opportunity for growth is to divide the range into three areas—one for spring, another for summer and fall, and a third for winter.

The number and distribution of the goats on these divisions should be such as to secure proper and uniform utilization of the forage. The divisions should be protected from grazing except during the seasons determined upon. On successive parts of the summer and fall range grazing should be deferred until after seed maturity of the forage plants so as to insure proper revegetation. On winter range the forage close to the sheds should be reserved for stormy periods only.

The old practice of bedding the goats on the same bed ground every night in the year prevents proper management of the range and results in overgrazing, in uneven utilization of the forage and general depreciation of the range. This in turn has a bad effect on the condition of goats and the production of meat and mohair. The use of many bed grounds widely distributed over the range aids materially in improving the quality and quantity of the forage, reducing the trampling and driving of the goats, and securing better growth of goats and mohair. The ideal system is to bed the goats wherever night overtakes them, and it is this system, called the "bedding-out" system, that growers of goats are urged to adopt wherever practicable.

The bedding-out system cannot be strictly adhered to during kidding, during periods of stormy winter weather, or other times in which it is not at all times is practicable and it has many advantages.

Range to be suitable for goats should possess a mixture of browse, grasses, and weeds, be free from continued heavy rains and snows, and be well supplied with bed grounds and watering places. Browse furnishes most of the range feed for goats throughout the year, so that it should be abundant. Grass and weeds are necessary for does and kids during the spring and summer, and are of considerable value at all times to give variety to the forage.

Plenty of fresh palatable feed has a marked beneficial effect on mohair production, growth of the goats, and the proportion of kids raised. It also reduces the proportion of losses. Therefore, instead of overstocking a range with inferior goats, the producer should stock it with the number of high-grade goats which it can conservatively carry.

The range goat should be the large, well-built, early maturing Angora, producing a large quantity of fine mohair. The body and chest should be relatively broad and deep, the back wide and straight, the thighs full, the ribs well sprung, and the legs short, strong, and set wide apart. Such Angoras make possible a substantial revenue from two sources—mohair and meat.

The does should be of good size, have good constitutions, be good producers of mohair, and should produce sufficient milk to insure proper growth of their kids. The bucks should more nearly approximate the ideal than the does. They should be large and vigorous and should produce a large quantity of high-quality mohair. Only those wethers which produce a very large quantity of fine mohair should be retained in the herd after they are two years old.

Most Popular Hog.

The butcher hog, weighing between 200 and 250 pounds is the most popular with the packing companies because it furnishes everything that is desirable in meat, and consequently will command a higher price.

Some people these days believe that the roll of honor is the roll of bank bills.
