Fairy Tale
BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

TATTLE-TALE TWINS.
Master Wood Elf had promised the girl and boy who were having adventures that he would take them to visit the Tattle-Tale Twins.

"Well," said Master Thoughtfulness,
"I will leave you with Mr. Wood Elf who is to take you to visit the Tattle-Tale Twins."
"Good-bye," said the girl.
"Good-bye, Master Thoughtfulness," said the boy. "Really," he added, as they both waved to Master Thoughtfulness, "this is a more wonderful trip than ever I dreamed of. You see, Mr.
Wood Elf, I don't know whether Mrs.
Wood Elf told you or not, but we're off on adventures. We also want to find out how we can become leaders."

"In short I want to be a leader among men and the girl wants to be a leader among women."
"They say we can find out how to manage this by going to the House of Secrets where our questions will be answered."

"Yes," said Mr. Wood Elf, "I heard you were on your way. We hear about those who are going forth for adventures.
We like to meet them too!" Mr. Wood Elf made a low bow and the boy made a bow nearly as low and as fine as his.

He was such a nice soul, the boy and girl decided. There wasn't anything unusual in his looks or in his

"We'll Be Off Now."

ways. He was just thoroughly nice, that was all, and that was really enough.

"You knew we were going to visit the Tattle-Tale Twins this afternoon, didn't you?" asked Mr. Wood Elf.
"Yes, to be sure you did. It was the last thing Master Thoughtfulness said to you. Well, we'll be off now. We'll walk along through the valley a little way and then as we come to the next hill we'll find at the bottom of it the Tattle-Tale Twins. They haven't any real home, but that is where we usually can find them."

"It's not far. We'll get there by supper time. It may not be a very pleasant meal in a way, but I think you will be amused by it. And all the family come around then—that is as many of the family as ever do appear together. Some of them like to be off hiding behind things, trying to see things that someone does which they can tattle about. Oh, they're an awful family. We have a dreadful time with them. We're so afraid folks will think they're funny or smart or that it's right to tell on others—and yet we're thankful to say they haven't been very lucky."

"I should think you two might put them to shame! Although, I don't suppose anything will make them very much ashamed of themselves," Mr.
Wood Elf sighed. "Well, anyway, it's part of the trip. We must see everything, mustn't we?"
"We'd like to," said the boy.

"We would," agreed the girl, nodding her head.
They spent the afternoon in walking, though at times they did stop for short rests. They passed many people on the road going forward and some going back from where the boy and girl had started.

"Some, you see," explained Mr.
Wood Elf, "don't want to go on with their adventures. They've gotten as far as they think they can get. They've lost hope about getting to the House of Secrets in some cases, and in other cases they're so satisfied with themselves they don't think anything lies ahead worth seeing. There is a bad turn in the road along the next valley, beyond the hill we're coming to this afternoon."

"It's called Turn—that's all, but if you go on, around the turn, you're still going towards the House of Secrets, but if you stop and turn back, thinking there is not much ahead, when you get into a rut called the Self-Satisfied Rut, which runs backwards. These people are all coming back from it.
But we will come to that place later.
You'll see the lay of the land for yourselves."

After a time they reached the end of the valley where there was a small hill. At the foot of the hill they saw a lot of little creatures scrambling to get up the hill, and every time they got up a little distance they came sliding down again.

"You see," explained Mr. Wood Elf,
"the whole family has become too weak to climb the hill."
