LEARN A CAROL A DAY.

There is no better way to get the Christmas spirit than to sing the good old Christmas carols with your friends and neighbors. The "Learn a Carol a Day" campaign is country-wide and growing more popular each year. For this purpose The National Bureau of Community Service, Madison Ave., New York City, has prepared a song sheet of ten of the best and most familiar carols. These may be obtained from them at cost of printing. You will find the words of a number of these songs in another column of the TIMES this week. Save your copy learn as many of the words as you can, bring the paper with you to the nearest community meeting and enjoy singing them there. Song sheets will be sent out to each of the schools. Children will find spare time to copy and learn them if they are copied on the board. This will be time well and profitably spent. Let all the people young and older meet together for one of the most pleasant evenings of the year.

THE DOOR SLAMS ON HAPPINESS

Poor Blood Makes Bad Health—Then Comes the "Blues."

Once the vigor of red blood becomes sapped of its strength, the door to happiness is literally slammed. Weariness of body follows and it unfailingly engenders depressed thoughts. To be reserved and cheerless becomes a habit. After a time there is an almost flimsy dimness in the expression of the eyes and a pallor to the skin. Days seem dull and dark and difficult. A sense of insufferable gloom pervades the spirit.

Then it is that Gude's Pepto-Mangan is the great help. It is a red blood builder. It puts red into the blood—increases the number of corpuscles which make blood rich and red. When the blood is restored to its natural healthy state, the sensation of well-being returns. Instead of shuffling along carelessly, there is the firm and spry step, the bright lusterful eyes, the clear complexion, identified with the strength and vigor of good health. The druggist has Gude's Pepto-Mangan in both liquid and tablet form. Advertisement.

"Good! Then we'll bring him to." Lakington took some crystals from a jar on one of the shelves, and placed them in a tumbler. Then he added a few drops of liquid and held the glass directly under the unconscious man's nose. Almost at once the liquid began to effervesce, and in less than a minute Drummond opened his eyes and stared dazedly round the room.

"Feeling better, my friend?" With a mocking smile, Lakington laid the tumbler on a table close by. "Much, thank you, Henry," murmured Hugh. "Ah! and there's Carl." He grinned cheerfully, and Lakington struck him on the mouth. "You can stop that style of conversation, Captain Drummond," he remarked. "I dislike it."

"Accept my congratulations," he said at length, in a low voice which, despite himself, shook a little. "You are the first man who has ever done that, and I shall treasure the memory of that blow."

She came almost at once, a villainous-looking blackguard with her, and as she saw Hugh she gave a pitiful little moan and held out her hand to him. "Why did you come, boy?" she cried. "Didn't you know it was only a forgery—that note?"

"An interesting point," murmured Lakington. "Surely if a charming girl is unable—or unwilling—to write herself to her fiance, her father is a very able person to supply the deficiency. Especially if he has been kindly endowed by Nature with a special aptitude for—er—imitating writing."

"But time presses. And I don't want to go without telling you a little about the program, Captain Drummond. Unfortunately both Mr. Peterson and I have to leave you for tonight; but we shall be returning tomorrow morning—or, at any rate, I shall. You will be left in charge of Heinrich—you remember the filthy Boche?—with whom you had words the other night. As you may expect, he entertains feelings of great friendship and affection for you, so you should not lack for any bodily comforts, such as may be possible in your present somewhat cramped position. Then tomorrow, when I return, I propose to try a few experiments on you, and, though I fear you will find them painful, it's a great thing to suffer in the cause of science. . . . You will always have the satisfaction of knowing that dear little Phyllis will be well cared for." With a sudden, quick

LOUISBURG, FROM WHENCE HER GLORY!

There's crouched away in the Heart of the South, In the land of the Long Leaf Pine, Where the corn fields glisten and the cotton flowers bloom With the clustering black berry vine. 'Mongst the hills on the sides of the classic Tar A town of the Old North State, And th' Nature's been lavish and kind with her gifts, She's never aspired to be great.

If the Tar wasn't silent and mute in its course It might tell a bit of her glory. For there must have been deeds that were wrought in her midst That were never writ in story.

She must have been peopled from some sturdy stock Who gave of their purer veins, To have fought and labored and kept the faith In spite of her worldly gains.

For there's no greater glory to be sought for a town Than to be truly fortified. When Churches, Homes and Peoples combine To uplift her with Godly pride.

Then the Churches were as sentinels, their sacred creeds Have lived through all the years. For the peoples' faiths were centered there. With all their hopes and fears.

Here were the homes of some grand old sires Those purposeful men of toil, Who sat with the mothers beside the home fires, And burned the midnight oil.

These times they were cradling heroes And seeking to mantle their youth With shields and helmets of Virtue, And branding their girdles with Truth.

They were building for future ages, For the years that were to come, That their children might go in and out untrammelled, To safeguard their country and home.

Her schools too were as mighty bulwarks That for Godly culture stood, Where modesty adorned its women, And the whole atmosphere seemed good.

Here men were coached in the schools of justice, And were given a lofty ideal. For there's nothing that equals a good birthright And the gift of a good square deal.

Today, there are heroes as brave as live In the annals of yesterday.

movement, he seized the girl and kissed her before she realized his intention. The rope round Drummond cracked as he struggled impotently, and Lakington's sneering face seemed to swim in a red glow.

"That is quite in keeping, is it not," he snarled, "to kiss the lady, and to strike the man like this—and this—and this? . . . A rain of blows came down on Drummond's face, till, with a gasping sigh, the girl slipped fainting to the floor.

"That'll do, Lakington," said Peterson, intervening once again. "Have the girl carried upstairs, and send for Heinrich. It's time we were off."

With an effort Lakington let his hand fall to his side, and stood back from his victim. "Perhaps for the present, it will," he said slowly. "But tomorrow—tomorrow, Captain Drummond, you shall scream to heaven for mercy, until I take out your tongue and you can scream no more." He turned as the German came into the room. "I leave them to you, Heinrich," he remarked shortly. "Use the dog-whip if they shout, and gag them."

The German's eyes were fixed on Hugh gloatingly. "They will not shout twice," he said in his guttural voice. "The dirty Boche to it himself will see."

There are men and women of as pure ideals As were ever fashioned from clay. Then why shouldn't we have better standards? For haven't we been further than they? Perhaps we haven't progressed nearer Or perhaps we have drifted away.

Every town echoes the voice of its people, So give Christ the Right-of-Way. Let our children of Tomorrow know it For they'll write our History of Today. —L. K. F.
