PORTLAND CEMENT

TOWN and country—our grandfathers would rub their eyes at many of the changes. Permanence, economy, pleasing appearance—all are far more considered than formerly.

Your building material dealer has had much to do with this change. Atlas Portland Cement has done its share in the last quarter century.

In spite of the tremendous demand for concrete, both manufacturer and dealer accept a smaller margin of profit on it than almost any other building material you can buy. It is today your most economical building material.

SYPHILITIC BABY INFECTS HOUSEHOLD WHICH ADOPTS IT

Raleigh, Oct. 17.—Syphilis does not halt for kind hearts. Infection from this loathsome disease may reasonably be expected as one of the possible results of adoption of children through irregular channels, however well-intentioned prospective foster-parents may be. This is the opinion of officials of the State Board of Public Welfare who recently have had called to their attention a case in point which occurred in one of the eastern counties, when both foster-mother and wet-nurse contracted syphilis from an infected baby which had been adopted from a deserted and probably immoral mother without authoritative permission.

In all probability, such a tragedy would have been avoided, Public Welfare officials say, if legal methods of adoption had been followed. The State law says in this regard that no child shall be removed from its mother under six months after birth without permission from the clerk of the court and the county health officer. In this case, the law was disregarded. The baby developed symptoms of syphilis when it was about a month old. By this time, without permission of either the clerk of the court or the county health officer, the child was already in its foster-home where it was a source of contagion to innocent and well-meaning people. Had the foster-parents applied to the proper authorities for permission to adopt the child, the case would probably have been put into the hands of the county superintendent of public welfare, the logical person to handle it.

The story of what happened instead is sad enough. A man and his wife, both of excellent character and standing in their community, had been for a long time very anxious to adopt a baby girl. They were informed by a physician that a young woman patient of his whose husband had deserted her was expecting to be confined. The man, thereupon, had a lawyer draw up papers of formal surrender of the child, if a girl, which the young woman signed. The doctor had advertised the fact that, because she had been deserted and was unable to work, the mother would have to give away her child as soon after birth as possible. But he failed to advertise any suspicions of syphilitic infection which he may have had reason to entertain.

Twenty-four hours after its birth the baby who was, to all appearances, a fine child, had been received into her new home, to the great satisfaction of her foster-parents who planned to give her every advantage. About a month later, the baby developed symptoms of syphilis. Definite diagnosis came too late to forestall infection of both foster-mother and wet-nurse, the former being afflicted with the disease in a most virulent form.

Naturally enough, the foster-parents no longer wished to keep in their home the child who, although innocently, had brought such horrible contamination there. So the baby was finally resigned to the care of the county superintendent of public welfare, but too late for the Superintendent to do anything more than try to find another (and probably less fortunate) home for the child after care has been pronounced. Because of such a history, it will be difficult to place this baby upon whom the sins of its parents have been visited.
