of his property with the other child. For obvious reasons this will never be adopted in the south.

The Chinese, called Chinks, are very numerous in the cities of the West. They are noted for their honesty and loyalty, tho they cling to their oriental habits and customs to a marked degree. Chinese cemeteries never grow nor increase in size, in this country. After the lapse of a certain time, their bones are exhumed and shipped back to old China to be buried. A trip thru China Town at night is one of the sights in store for the tourist, but one visit is enough for a lifetime. They are a wonderfully bright and clever people. Your scribe walked in Sing Fat's, the Chinese store on Geary Street, when a little Chinese girl said, "Come in Meester, let me sell you another Kimona." I said, "When did you ever sell me one?" She said "you came here two years ago with the Democrats and I mailed it back to Callina for you." All of which was true.

We had been promised a surprise by the management ever since we left Chicago, but what it was, was kept a secret from us until now. On Saturday the 12th day of Aug. we were all invited and taken on an excursion to the Bohemian Grove for a days outing. This was located about eighty miles in the mountains North of San Francisco. We took the ferry to Alameda, where two long trains took us to one of the most weird and picturesque spots in the world. In a grove between mountains in a red wood forest, with trees several hundred feet high that had been standing and growing ever since Moses led his Jewish tribes across the Red Sea, the stumps of some of the old monarchs of the forest, that perhaps were growing when Eve studied her fashion plates, and fig leaf patterns in the Garden of Eden. Centuries looked down from the tops of these gigantic trees on the delegates as they wandered through this scene so unique, so sublime and impressive to those unacquainted with one of the chief glories of California. With an appetizer and a chaser for those who wanted it, lunch was served in the open grove to a thousand visitors. Your scribe has attended many luncheons and dinners in his brief career, but for perfection of culinary art, and its service, he has never seen this one surpassed. In the entire course a whole broiled chicken was brought to every plate.

Afterwards, all were invited to a remarkable natural theatre, with gigantic redwood trees forming the proscenium of the stage, and a circle of them outlining the main floor, like the pillars of some vast forest Cathedral. While seated in the open auditorium, on rustic seats on logs, a voice was heard issuing from a secret place on the mountain side, forming the back ground of the stage; it was the spirit of the place bidding them welcome to his quiet haunts. Hon. John W. Davis the newly elected president, replied in a two minute speech, suited to the invitation and scene, with an eloquence that still echoes in your scribe's memory. Then for an hour the visitors enjoyed a concert, with music furnished on a huge pipe organ played by an artist; all the participants being members of the Bohemian Club, that owned the Grove. And all amateurs, with a tenor as musical as McCormack's, with a program vocal and musical that your scribe has never seen surpassed in New York, thus ended the last and best day of our fine days, in San Francisco. On this trip your scribe met Mr. Luther Burbank, the plant wizard of the world; who has developed the seedless orange, the seedless grape and the spineless edible cactus, who has done more for the comfort and the feeding of humanity than any one who ever lived. His 74 years have dealt gently with him, and he receives the praises of new acquaintances with a modest dignity that is delightful. His seedless oranges and grapes are adding untold wealth each year to the favored fruit growers of that wonderful state. A description of this would not be complete without mentioning the many friends who accompanied us to the grove, among them a lady artist from Berkeley, whose graces and beauty caused our party to call her the "Fairy of the Ferry." On our return to the City we began the packing of our baggage to entrain for the trip North to the home of the eternal Glaciers.

WOOD SCHOOL ITEMS

Friends, I want you to know what a nice little school we have at Wood. We have three teachers and about one hundred children on roll. Misses Eugenia Boone, Neva Harper, and Lena Fleetwood are the teachers.

I am going to tell you about Miss Boone's room and pupils now. You know I always like to make mention of her pupils and room, because I am one of her pupils. In our room we have two honor rolls. One for perfect attendance and the other for averaging ninety on each subject. The following ones are the pupils who averaged ninety on each subject during last month: Annie Gupton, Annie Rue Wood, Viola Thompson, Ida Coley and Raymond Sturges. The following ones got on the honor roll for perfect attendance. Annie Gupton, Annie Rue Wood, Viola Thompson, Odeil Thompson and Ida Coley. Not only in our room, but the others we have some very smart, studious pupils.

One of Miss Harper's boys found a weed that was a picture of the devil. We have an extra room fixed through the directions of Miss Harper as a library room.

Will call again some rainy day. IDA COLEY, Wood School, Seventh Grade.
