

GUARANTEED Value

Protecting Used Car Buyers
A Sound Policy Followed by Authorized Ford Dealers

A Used Ford Car bought from an Authorized Ford Dealer carries with it an assurance of good value and satisfactory economical performance.

It was traded in for another Ford, proof positive of the faithful service and inexpensive up-keep enjoyed by its former owner, and it has been thoroughly inspected by the Authorized Ford Dealer.

See The Nearest
AUTHORIZED FORD DEALER

Ford

FROM YOUNGSVILLE SCHOOL

The following compositions from Youngsville Graded School pupils will no doubt be interesting to quite a number of our readers.

Abraham Lincoln

Abraham Lincoln was born in Kentucky on February 12, 1809 in a little log cabin. The hut did not contain but one room, one window, and one door. The land on which they lived was rocky and in fertile.

Lincoln lived there until he was eight years old. Then his father moved to the frontier of Indian. All the clothes and furniture that they had was carried on two horses and wagons and they were borrowed ones.

Thomas Jefferson was born in Abbeville County, Virginia. April 13, 1743. He was the son of a rich planter. His early life was that usual to the wealthy Virginians of those days—a life of culture, refinement, and ease.

At college he was a hard student, but he was very fond of music, dancing, and the society of young ladies, and would often ride many miles to attend a party. He was full of fun and had a grace of manner that made him a great favorite in the social circles of Virginia.

He was educated at Williams and Mary College and began the practice of law. He was often a member of the Virginia Legislature and was a member of the Continental Congress.

He wrote the Declaration of Independence and signed it. He was later governor of Virginia, Minister to France, Secretary of State, Vice president and president of the United States from 1801 to 1809.

Thomas Jefferson probably had a greater influence on our political life than any other American. He directed the acts of Congress during his presidency, and after his retirement until his death, his advice was constantly sought by political leaders.

One of the greatest acts of his career was performed after his retirement to private life, namely, the founding of University of Virginia. He spent his last days at his beautiful home, near Charlottesville, Virginia.

Here he entertained his numerous friends. He was undoubtedly one of the most learned men in his day. One of his acquaintances said "When he spoke of law, I thought he was a lawyer, when he talked about machinery, I was sure he was an engineer when he talked of literature, I made up my mind that I had run against a college professor."

After he retired to private life, Jefferson became reconciled to his old friend John Adams and Jefferson carried on correspondence during the remainder of their lives. Both died on the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1826.

Catherine Young,
6th grade, Math Rock School.

Thomas A. Edison was born in a small town of Ohio in 1847. He was the son of a very poor man. He did not go to school but 2 months in his life, but he learned a great deal from his mother. He was very fond of books. When he was twelve years old, he was a newsboy on the railroad. He was kept busy selling newspapers, magazines, and fruit.

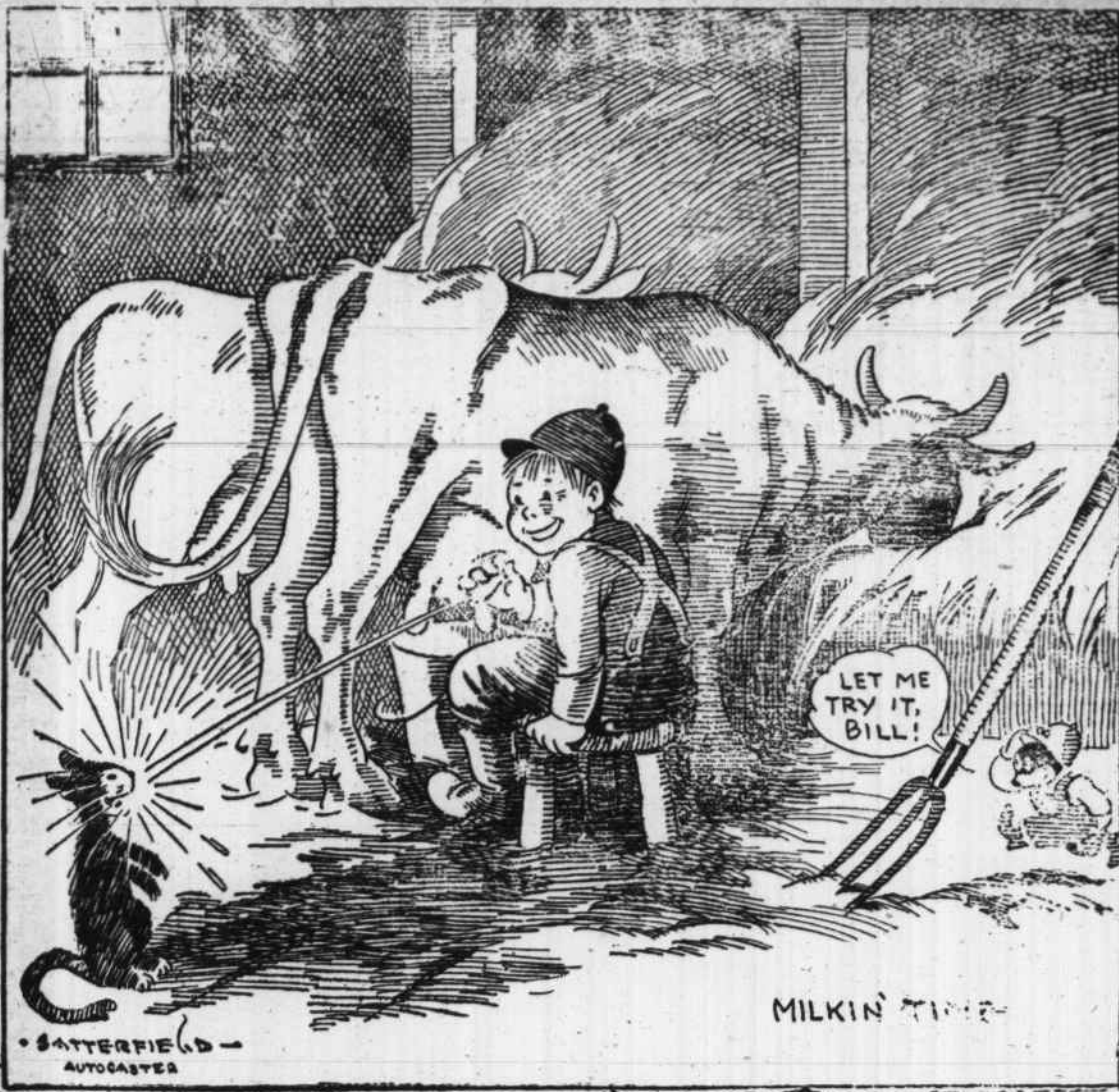

While Edison was a newsboy, he saw what great service the telegraph was in running the train, so he became ambitious to learn telegraphy. Being poor he could not give up his job. At last a good fortune came to him for his bravery. One day a little child was about to get over by the train and he snatched her from the railroad. For three years while continuing his other work Edison studied telegraph, and when he was eighteen years old, he was given his first position as telegraph operator. He soon became one of the best operators in the country.

Edison invented several devices for the improvement of the telegraph system and it soon brought him some money enough so that he could give up his position as operator. Then he devoted his whole time to inventing. He invented the electric lights in 1880. He also invented the phonograph. It has been said that the secret of Edison's success was persistence, for he was a tireless worker. In one of his inventions he discovered a mistake so Edison went to his shop declaring that he would not come out until he discovered the trouble. He stayed in the shop two and one half days. During that time he did not eat anything but crackers and cheese, which he ate while working at his bench.

Edison is one of the greatest inventors of the age. From the U. S. government he has more than seven hundred patents. On account of his inventions Edison is called the American Magician.

Julius Perry,
6th grade, Math Rock School.

MILKIN TIME

He was defeated by Grant, though when he surrendered with a smile feeling that he had done his duty.

On October 12, 18— Robert E. Lee died. The whole South mourned the loss of their leader, a soldier with a fearless heart, a man with a noble soul. The world today acknowledge him to be one of the greatest commanders and one of the best of men.

Leonard Frazier,
7th grade, Math Rock School.

George Washington was born in Virginia February 22, 1732. It was not long after his birth the house in which he was born was burned down. His father at that time was in some ironworks.

Washington's father removed his family to a place which he owned in Stafford county, near Fredericksburg. The house is not now standing, but a picture was made of it before it was destroyed. It was, like many Virginia houses of the day, divided into four rooms on a floor, and had great outside chimneys at either end.

George Washington as we know was our first president. He was president in the years of 1789 to 1797. He was president eight years.

It was on April 16, 1789 that Washington left Mount Vernon for New York, where congress first met, and where he was to be inaugurated president. Some of the signs of welcome were queer and some were beautiful and touching. When he reached New York, guns were fired, and vast crowd of people, headed waiting to receive him. Our first president and he did so much for us.

When Washington had completed his two terms of office, he was resolved to go back to private life. For more than twenty years he had really been at the head of the nation. Now he meant to go back to his home, but before he went, he had it in his mind to say one word to his countrymen. Then he wrote his famous "Farewell address to the people of the United States." He was a great man, a splendid figure in history and he knew it, but he was too great to be in vain of his distinctin, though he was not too great to use his distinction for the benefit of his country.

Nevertheless the address is so full of sound political wisdom that I wish it might be read in every public school in the land on the 22nd day of February. The observance of Washington's birthday began in a quiet way during Washington's lifetime as early in 1783 when the war was over, but before the treaty of peace was signed, some gentlemen met together to celebrate his birthday.

On December 12, 1799 he had been riding over his farm as usual but a rain and sleet storm came up, and he returned to the house chilled through by the exposure. In the night he had an attack of ague, and the next day was Saturday the 14th, he breathed difficulty, and messengers were sent for one doctor after another.

Toward evening he said to Dr. Craike: "I die hard but I am not afraid to die, my breath cannot last long." He said little more, only thanked his attendants for their kindness, and bade them give themselves no further trouble. Between ten and eleven o'clock that night died.

It is said of Washington that he was first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

Annie Belle Crenshaw,
5th grade, Math Rock School.

address to the people of the United States." He was a great man, a splendid figure in history and he knew it, but he was too great to be in vain of his distinctin, though he was not too great to use his distinction for the benefit of his country.

Nevertheless the address is so full of sound political wisdom that I wish it might be read in every public school in the land on the 22nd day of February. The observance of Washington's birthday began in a quiet way during Washington's lifetime as early in 1783 when the war was over, but before the treaty of peace was signed, some gentlemen met together to celebrate his birthday.

On December 12, 1799 he had been riding over his farm as usual but a rain and sleet storm came up, and he returned to the house chilled through by the exposure. In the night he had an attack of ague, and the next day was Saturday the 14th, he breathed difficulty, and messengers were sent for one doctor after another.

Toward evening he said to Dr. Craike: "I die hard but I am not afraid to die, my breath cannot last long." He said little more, only thanked his attendants for their kindness, and bade them give themselves no further trouble. Between ten and eleven o'clock that night died.

It is said of Washington that he was first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

Annie Belle Crenshaw,
5th grade, Math Rock School.

address to the people of the United States." He was a great man, a splendid figure in history and he knew it, but he was too great to be in vain of his distinctin, though he was not too great to use his distinction for the benefit of his country.

Nevertheless the address is so full of sound political wisdom that I wish it might be read in every public school in the land on the 22nd day of February. The observance of Washington's birthday began in a quiet way during Washington's lifetime as early in 1783 when the war was over, but before the treaty of peace was signed, some gentlemen met together to celebrate his birthday.

On December 12, 1799 he had been riding over his farm as usual but a rain and sleet storm came up, and he returned to the house chilled through by the exposure. In the night he had an attack of ague, and the next day was Saturday the 14th, he breathed difficulty, and messengers were sent for one doctor after another.

Toward evening he said to Dr. Craike: "I die hard but I am not afraid to die, my breath cannot last long." He said little more, only thanked his attendants for their kindness, and bade them give themselves no further trouble. Between ten and eleven o'clock that night died.

It is said of Washington that he was first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

Annie Belle Crenshaw,
5th grade, Math Rock School.

address to the people of the United States." He was a great man, a splendid figure in history and he knew it, but he was too great to be in vain of his distinctin, though he was not too great to use his distinction for the benefit of his country.

Nevertheless the address is so full of sound political wisdom that I wish it might be read in every public school in the land on the 22nd day of February. The observance of Washington's birthday began in a quiet way during Washington's lifetime as early in 1783 when the war was over, but before the treaty of peace was signed, some gentlemen met together to celebrate his birthday.

On December 12, 1799 he had been riding over his farm as usual but a rain and sleet storm came up, and he returned to the house chilled through by the exposure. In the night he had an attack of ague, and the next day was Saturday the 14th, he breathed difficulty, and messengers were sent for one doctor after another.

Toward evening he said to Dr. Craike: "I die hard but I am not afraid to die, my breath cannot last long." He said little more, only thanked his attendants for their kindness, and bade them give themselves no further trouble. Between ten and eleven o'clock that night died.

It is said of Washington that he was first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

Annie Belle Crenshaw,
5th grade, Math Rock School.

address to the people of the United States." He was a great man, a splendid figure in history and he knew it, but he was too great to be in vain of his distinctin, though he was not too great to use his distinction for the benefit of his country.

Nevertheless the address is so full of sound political wisdom that I wish it might be read in every public school in the land on the 22nd day of February. The observance of Washington's birthday began in a quiet way during Washington's lifetime as early in 1783 when the war was over, but before the treaty of peace was signed, some gentlemen met together to celebrate his birthday.

On December 12, 1799 he had been riding over his farm as usual but a rain and sleet storm came up, and he returned to the house chilled through by the exposure. In the night he had an attack of ague, and the next day was Saturday the 14th, he breathed difficulty, and messengers were sent for one doctor after another.

Toward evening he said to Dr. Craike: "I die hard but I am not afraid to die, my breath cannot last long." He said little more, only thanked his attendants for their kindness, and bade them give themselves no further trouble. Between ten and eleven o'clock that night died.

It is said of Washington that he was first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

Annie Belle Crenshaw,
5th grade, Math Rock School.

SUCH IS LIFE

Van Zelm

WOULDN'T IT MAKE U MAD?

BOYS CONTEST
BULLETIN
SEE THIS SPACE NEXT WEEK. THE WINNERS IN THE GREAT NATIONWIDE DRAWING CONTEST WILL BE ANNOUNCED.
THEN THE PRIZES
BIG LEAGUE BASEBALL EQUIPMENT FOR ALL WINNERS