KNOWING ONE'S SELF

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

"I'D LIKE nothing better," Rust said to me when we were boys a good many years ago, "than to be able to run a farm of my own; I know I could make money," and he launched into a narrative of detail in an endeavor to prove to me just what, in such a case, he was sure he could accomplish. Even with my boyish inexperience, I felt that Rust's plans were chimerical, and I entertained the gravest doubts as to his being able to carry them out if he were given the chance. He has had a farm to manage, let these years, but he is still a poor man. It is a valuable asset, and a rare one, I sometimes think, for a man to be able adequately and justly to estimate his own strength and his own weakness, to know what he can do, and to know also, what his limitations are.

A wise old man whom I once knew used to say in speaking of the somewhat difficult and treacherous game of poker with which he had considerable practice, "if a man does not know the cards, he ought not to play the game." I am sure that many men whom I have observed in the game of life have had a very faulty appreciation of the value of the cards which they were holding in their hands, and sometimes threw away their ace and were disappointed when they did not take the trick with a two-spot.

When I was engaged in the teaching of composition and an eager boy came to me at the beginning of the semester with the statement, "I know I am going to manage your course all right, because composition has always been my easiest subject," I knew almost to a certainty that I had struck a man who could not spell, who had no knowledge of even the elements of grammar, and whose literary possibilities were pretty hopeless.

Powers was a good illustration of the man who did not know himself. He was an unusually dramatic and magnetic speaker; he had an excellent brain, good training, and an attractive physique. He was deeply and sincerely religious and possessed one of the most winning personalities I have ever known. As a preacher he could have had any crowd at his feet. He was obsessed, however, with the idea of being a business man; yet every business which he touched collapsed under his hand. He began life with a modest fortune, but at fifty it was gone; he had sunk it all in first one visionary scheme and then another; but he still kept on convinced that ultimately he would make his fortune.

There are reasons, I have no doubt, why few of us know ourselves less well than we should. We all hate criticism; we take advice unwillingly. We attempt the things that we want very much to be able to do without considering seriously how well fitted we are for the accomplishment of these things. We listen to the flatterer with a more willing ear than to the candid friend who sometimes not very kindly points out to us the faults we are loathe to admit.
