BEST YIELDS SECURED FROM NATIVE CLOVER SEED

Raleigh, March 8.—Despite the higher cost of red clover seed produced in the United States, such seed is better for use in North Carolina than foreign imported seed.

E. C. Blair, extension agronomist at State College, finds that red clover seed grown in the United States now costs about five dollars a bushel more than the French grown seed. "But," he says, "the native grown seed are best and well worth the difference in price. Although the French seeds are among the best of the foreign seeds brought into the United States, our native seeds have several advantages over them. These advantages do not show so much in a test for germination and purity but they do appear in the field."

For instance, Mr. Blair states that the Virginia Experiment Station has found that American grown seed averages over 1,000 pounds more hay per acre than the French grown, when the two are sown side by side. The difference is due mainly to the fact that the foreign seed is more subject to anthracnose. The disease destroys much of the stand of clover and seriously check the growth of those plants not killed outright. As a result seed seldom makes a good second crop.

Indications are that the supply of American grown seed will be very short this season, while an unusually large amount of foreign seed is on the market.

Mr. Blair cautions North Carolina farmers to know the source of the seed which they buy.
