TIME TO PLANT LATE HAY CROPS

Raleigh, June 28.—Recent, general rains in North Carolina furnish the opportunity of planting late hay crops and farmers who need feed should take advantage of this opportunity.

"These hay crops may be planted after small grain or on land where the spring planted crops have come up to a poor stand," says E. C. Blair, extension agronomist at State College. "Many of our farmers will be hard pressed for hay and forage this year and they should by all means, plant such late crops. In the extreme eastern part of North Carolina, these crops might well follow Irish potatoes."

Mr. Blair points out however, that the late planted hay crops must grow rapidly to produce good yields for that reason, they should be planted on the fertile land or be well manured or fertilized. Good seed should be used also.

Promptness in planting is the essential thing, states Mr. Blair. For this reason, the ease in obtaining good planting seed should be the guide to the kind of crop to plant. If soybeans of the Laredo, Virginia and Herman varieties can be secured these will mature early and produce excellent hay. Cowpeas also fit in well. Sorghums and millets are often used and yield well though they are not quite as good as Sudan grass. On good land, Mr. Blair states that there is no better late hay crop than Sudan grass. It will produce heavy yields when sown broadcast at the rate of 30 pounds to the acre. It will give two cuttings if planted by July 10th. Nearly everyone has some seed corn and ordinary field corn will produce tremendous yields of forage if sown thickly in rows three feet apart and cultivated two or three times. It should be cut when the the blooms fall from the tassels.

A GOOD NAME

A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches. This saying is grounded in the social structure of the times. The thought is much more than mere sentiment—it is good business.

A good name is recognized as the biggest individual asset a business can have. It is the very keystone of modern industry and business relationship. Business today is done on such a broad scale—every merchant having a large number of customers—that it would not do to have a "shady" reputation. Aside from every other consideration it is regarded as harmful to be known as one who would "slip something over."

Advertising has standardized almost every article you buy. You don't have to bargain and haggle and dicker to know that you are getting as good as you give.

That's why it pays to read the advertisements and buy advertised goods. A merchant's advertising is the biggest guarantee of his faithful carrying out of every pledge—his making good on every statement regarding his merchandise. The advertiser would not dare to risk his good name by advertising an unworthy product.

If you value constant satisfaction—if you want to get your money's worth every time—read the advertisements and buy advertised merchandise.

Take advantage of the advertisements and you'll get real value.

In this law enforcement, law enactment business, the cart seems to be before the horse.
