OUR RALEIGH LETTER

By M. L. Shipman

Raleigh, Nov. 16—A warlike statement by former Governor Cameron Morrison on the senate race of next year, presentation to the state of an excellent painting of the late Treasurer Lacy, with eulogy by former governor McLean, trial of two prominent citizens on charges of violating the banking laws of the nation and various other matters of lesser importance engaged the minds of Raleigh citizens during the week—and attracted attention of capital circles. All in all it was a quiet week in the capital, this being unusual at this season of the year when winter activities usually keep things moving. Raleigh folks also gave attention to the trial at Marion and to developments in other walks of state life, notably the tobacco price increase of the latter portion of the week.

Governor Morrison's declaration that it would be very unwise for the Democratic party to allow Senator Simmons to get the nomination for re-election next year set the political circles to talking. Morrison, as usual, spoke his mind; but in this case he spoke it about a man to whom he owes much politically. In some circles it was regarded as a frank statement of his views which will do no good at the present time, and therefore is untimely. In other circles it was regarded as base ingratitude on Morrison's part, because Senator Simmons has done nothing in the past against Morrison except to refuse to vote for Al Smith last year. Generally speaking it was felt that the statement, if it really should have been issued at all, came prematurely; and will have the effect of helping the senior senator, something Morrison is not desirous of doing. It will be recalled that it was only through the Simmons support that Mr. Morrison ever got to amount to much in North Carolina political circles, and if he has his eye on the Senate, he is going about it in the wrong way. Still, there are some who express admiration that he has stated his case so frankly, and who remember, in justice to the former governor, that he never hesitates to speak openly, even though unwisely in many instances, on subjects dear to his heart.

But the Morrison shelling of the woods did not bring out anything else. There are reported to be half a dozen men who would like to succeed Senator Simmons next year, but not one of them reacted favorably to the Morrison declaration. All of them kept quiet, apparently in the belief that the least said is soonest mended. The matter, the better the party's chances to win next year, the better chance there will be of presenting a unified front. And most of these feel that party unity is the paramount matter.

In glowing tribute to his many virtues, Governor McLean presented to the state a wonderful portrait of the late treasurer, Benjamin R. Lacy, who died last winter. The governor was at his best because he was speaking of a man whom he loved, and he did not fail to speak in glowing terms. But at that he merely expressed the feeling of all so far as Ben Lacy was concerned—the most popular officer, perhaps, the state has ever had. The portrait will hang above the treasurer's desk, where Ben Lacy labored for 28 years and which he could be driven away from only when he was seriously ill.

In one of the cases which has attracted statewide interest, W. Lunsford Long and William T. Council of Roanoke Rapids appeared in federal court to plead guilty to charges of violating the national banking laws. Judge I. M. Meekins heard all the evidence, heard that the men made full restitution before the bank examiners ever discovered the irregularities and then surprised all by dismissing the two from custody of the court without penalty. It was a most surprising end, even though it was known both men would have plenty of persons of influence to speak well of them. No one lost anything by the irregularities except the men themselves, who when they found how deeply they had gone in manipulating the million dollar shortage, brought about presumably by their excessive withdrawals in order to handle investments of some nature which had not panned out so well. They escaped much lighter than had been imagined by any who know the ways of federal courts.

Withdrawal of troops from Marion on the eve of a special term called to try union rioters and deputy sheriffs charged with murder naturally attracted attention to the trial, which proceeded during the week in an orderly manner. When this was written it was still underway, with many interested in seeing the outcome, which it is believed may have a great
