Urges every MAN, every WOMAN and every CHILD to attend our

REMOVAL SALE

On or about Jan. 5th, 1932, The Raleigh Salvage Company will occupy the L. P. Hicks building.

So successful has our Louisburg store operated since we located here — we must have larger quarters — Therefore our removal.

Rather than move a single piece of merchandise from one store to another we will Almost GIVE IT AWAY.

Come expecting the BIGGEST BARGAINS EVER — YOU WON'T BE DISAPPOINTED.

Conditions will improve and so will everything in and around Franklin County.

WE HAVE FAITH IN LOUISBURG

Shortly a New Year will be here so lets all cheer up! — Everything seems to have hit the bottom — There is only one way it can go now! UP.

THIS WEEK IN WASHINGTON

Special to The Franklin Times

Washington, D. C., December 22.—The adjournment of Congress over the Christmas holidays is giving the country at large a chance to size up the two Houses. The net result appears to be that we can expect the greatest show on earth when the members resume their labors. Enough intimation was given in the few days in which the Congressmen acted before the holidays to indicate that the favorite sport for the next few months of the nation's law-givers will be President-baiting. It looks certain that anything Mr. Hoover proposes, regardless of its good effect on the country, will be opposed in vigorous terms, and that practically everything he has said or done since his inauguration, barring only perhaps his Thanksgiving Proclamations, will come in for unstinted abuse.

So far as Congress can be said to be in harmony on anything right now, the one subject on which a majority vote can always be relied may be expressed in the slogan, "Down with Hoover." And it is not being expressed in language quite as refined as that. While that idea seems to be the favorite one in Congressional interviews, not even being confined to the opposition, political observers here believe that the President's personal and political enemies will take it out largely in conversation. They have seen too many similar conditions in the past to be convinced by the uproar against Mr. Hoover. They figure that, when it comes down to action and voting, at least on the fundamental program of reduced expenditures and increased taxation they will swing into line. They can be expected, however, to dress up the new legislation in their own words and endeavor to make it appear as their own child, entirely different from anything Mr. Hoover has suggested. The President is playing the same, in his endeavor to have necessary legislation passed, by being careful not to propose anything but the essentials, which all are agreed upon, avoiding any statement that might be taken as dictating methods. As a result, it appears unlikely that any political capital will be made of any of the President's messages to Congress since it convened.

There is no question that all Congressmen are convinced that new taxation and drastic cuts in governmental expenditures are demanded. The battles that will be fought will all be on the various plans that will be offered, and the members can be expected to fight each other fully as hard as they attack the President.

The Senate, which is prohibited from originating financial legislation and has to wait until the Lower House passes bills before it can take any action on them, will find its hands full with foreign affairs. Not since Senator Lodge attacked President Wilson for his foreign policy has there been such a chance for Senators to drag in the old spectre of "entangling alliances," and they can be expected to run the entire gamut of political fireworks in the discussions over the payment of war debts and reparations.

Whether the Senate is going to make it harder for the United States to collect its foreign debts or not is beyond the power of anybody here to predict. There is a feeling here that the Senate, as a whole, is likely to argue intense resentment among European statesmen by their frankness over war debts, but it is being pointed out on all sides, it is going to be difficult to collect the money. Germany owes us, and the other Allied nations, without going to war, an action that is not even remotely considered possible. None of the countries in the World War have the least desire to start another war, judging by their repeated expressions. Without force it does not seem likely that Germany can be made to pay the present debts and every indication points to a deep cut in the amount due.

It appears more than likely that the Senate eventually will decide to find out exactly how much Germany can afford to pay and then set in motion the machinery for collecting that amount, shaping domestic legislation to provide for the required increase in taxes that will have to be levied to offset such reduction. The failure of Congress to legislate approval of the Chief Executive's action in granting a moratorium to Germany, which expired on December 15, places that country in the light of a defaulter on its obligations, but this has been discounted and Congress' approval, considered merely as a perfunctory action, is expected any time.

The Senate is going to have its greatest difficulties over proposals that will be offered that the United States become a part of the World Court, if not of the League of Nations itself. The question is one that will open the floodgates of oratory and it is expected, result in more patriotic speeches and flag-waving than any similar discussion since the end of the war. The interposition of this question, which can be expected early, will furnish both sides with splendid campaign material even if it fails to result in as much benefit to the country as the more pressing demands for domestic relief.
