Crop Planning

(W. C. EAGLER
Asst. Agronomist Soil Conservation Service)

Since crop production is the prime function of the farmers of Franklin County, the proper planning and carrying out of suitable rotations or cropping systems looms as one of the major devices to be used in our erosion preventing and soil building work. In planning the cropping program of an individual farm, it is essential that the following objectives be kept in mind:

- (1) Keep the soil occupied with thick growing water holding crops as much of the time as possible.
- (2) Arrange the crop schedule so as to have an abundance of crop residue to turn in the soil at regular and stated intervals, so as to keep a high content of humus or organic matter present.
- (3) Plan the arrangement of the crops in such position and order as to control the greatest amount of erosion.
- (4) Plan a program that will at all times take care of the economic needs of the farmer in so far as conditions will permit, and
- (5) Use as many soil building crops as possible in order that the farmer's fields may grow more fertile as the years go by.

To show how these objectives may be obtained one may look at the agreement worked out with Mr. F. C. Winston, whose farm lies one mile west of Youngsville on the Old Tarboro Road. Mr. Winston under last year's A.A.A. program planted 28 acres in corn, 20 in cotton, 10 in wheat, 4 in oats, 5 in tobacco, and some lespedeza in the small grain. Although some change of crops has been followed, no definite soil building rotation has been previously worked out or followed.

The new program worked out and written into the agreement provides for a slight reduction in the acres in such row crops as cotton and corn with a very marked increase in such close growing crops as grain, lespedeza, and crimson clover. The increase is in crops that not only hold the soil but furnish a much needed increase in feed supply, and add constantly to the fertility of the soil.

On his main fields Mr. Winston will follow a four year rotation, as follows:

- 1st. year—cotton with crimson clover in middles.
- 2nd. year—corn followed with wheat or oats in fall.
- 3rd. year—wheat or oats with lespedeza sown in February or March.
- 4th. year—lespedeza.

It will be noticed that this rotation gives us a thick cover crop on the soil each winter and two summers or fully seventy per cent of the time. Three of the four years the soil will be growing a legume which will not only protect it from erosion but will add large and needed quantities of nitrogen secured from the air and tons of humus as well.

Mr. Winston has become interested in a permanent pasture of four acres on one of his steeper slopes. He is adding lime and fertilizer to the Cecil soil so that a heavy sod of well chosen pasture grasses and clovers will thrive thus taking care of the erosion problem here. Two more acres well drained, limed, manured, prepared, and inoculated will be put in alfalfa. Two natural draws are being sloped, graded, fertilized, and prepared for seeding down in a permanent meadow mixture. This sod or so-called meadow strip will take the runoff from the terraces gently down the slope, straining out the sediment and saving it. Remember this sediment is the very cream of the soil fertility of the farm.

A new innovation in crop arrangement is being worked out on forty acres of the sharper slopes. Of course, this along with the other acres is being terraced. But on this particular part of the farm strip cropping will be practiced. For instance half the field will have alternate strips of cotton and lespedeza while the other half goes in similar strips of corn and lespedeza. These strips will be the width of the terrace intervals. The advantage here is that we will not only practice contour tillage but should a heavy rain result in excess run-off breaking over rows and terraces and start a gully, we will always have these check strips of close-growing crops ready to slow down the water, filter out the soil, spread it and stop the gully before much damage is done. These lespedeza strips serve as shock troops all ways on duty ready for service when needed.

Mr. Winston is enthusiastic and rightly so about these and many other features of his new program, a program which he believes will build up his soil to its original fertility and bring back once again luxuriant fields of waving corn, snowy white cotton, and golden grain produced economically because of lespedeza, crimson clover, and above all a definite plan of operation.

In starting the new broiler project in Craven County, 5,200 baby chicks have been ordered to date.
