Timely Farm Questions

Answered at State College

Question: Is it too early to harvest sweet potatoes?

Answer: Sweet potatoes should be harvested when mature and always before the vines are killed by frost. If the sweets are not harvested before November there will, in all probability, be heavy losses from rot. Where the potatoes do not mature and the vines are killed by an unexpected frost, the vines should be cut from the stems immediately and the potatoes harvested as soon as possible. In digging the sweets every precaution should be taken to prevent bruising as this renders them subject to rot in storage and also lowers the market quality.

Question: What causes the feet of my laying birds to swell and become inflamed?

Answer: Such a condition may be the result of one of two things. Either a bruise which results in an abscess or a weakening of the tissues of the feet due to long continued laying. Many heavy layers show a slight enlargement of the bottom of the foot at the end of the laying period, but this is usually not severe enough to interfere with its performance during the next laying period. On the other hand, true bumble foot is readily distinguished by heavy swelling and inflammation and birds so afflicted seldom make complete recovery. See your county agent or send a bird to the Poultry Disease Laboratory, State College, Raleigh, for a complete diagnosis.

Question: When should lawn grasses be seeded for best results?

Answer: Outside of the mountain section, best results are obtained by early fall seeding. Even in the mountains, especially at elevations of less than 2,500 feet, better results are frequently secured from fall seeding than from seedings made in the spring. By seeding in the fall, the grasses will generally become well established before spring, and will have a good start on weeds and other undesirable grasses like crab grass. Extension Circular No. 189 gives directions for preparing the seed bed and also recommended grass mixtures and copies may be obtained free by writing the Agricultural Editor, State College.
