NORTH CAROLINA WREN BUILDS NEST IN MAN'S COAT POCKET

New York, April 2.—If you tried to buy a meal on the installment plan or had a wren build its nest in your coat pocket, you know how some of the luminaries in the monkeyshine marathon last week felt.

An Indiana clothing dealer went out to lunch and absent-mindedly locked a lot of customers in his store. . . . A South Carolina railroad executive's train broke down and he had to thumb a ride. . . . The Ottawa weather man was marooned in his home by a blizzard he had predicted. . . . A Boston holdup man and his victim ran in opposite directions around a block and bumped into each other in front of a cop. . . . A Canadian judge ruled that meals could not be bought on the installment plan. . . . A Chicago cop installed a burglar alarm on every window in his home and a burglar got in through a transom. . . . A Connecticut swimming meet audience protested a referee's decision by heaving him into the pool. . . . A Mexico City audience, annoyed at the outcome of a soccer game, burned down the grandstands. . . . Some Californians protested an editor's criticism of oranges by dunking him, in effigy, in orange juice. . . . A fire burned up everything in an Oklahoma building except the fireplace. . . . Some snow was placed on exhibition in Florida. . . . The Federal Trade Commission declared short spaghetti is just as nourishing as long spaghetti. . . .

A North Carolina Wren built its nest in a man's coat pocket. . . . Fried chicken was served on a New York subway. . . . Somebody planted corn stalks down the main street of Coatesville, Pa. . . . Canadian agriculture officials opened a package labelled "nursery stock" and discovered a crib. . . . The Rhode Island house of representatives voted $500 for a nonexistant charity. . . . A New Jersey man who swallows razor blades for a living got a stomach ache from eating shrimp. . . . A sheep that eats cigars was found in New York. . . . A Louisiana travel booklet was banned in Ohio as risque. . . . A Newton, Mass. woman completed her 64th year as a temporary city employee. . . . A man held up the Maumee, Ohio, police headquarters and Marlborough's (Conn.) fire engine burned up. . . . And an Indianapolis motorist told the judge he couldn't have been speeding because he was on his way to pay his income tax. . . .

TOO DEEP FOR HIM

A London missionary society recently received a report from the interior of Africa telling of a visit of one of its members with an old negro cannibal of the tribe of Niam-Niam. The missionary was telling the old cannibal about the World War, and how many lives it cost. "But how could so much human meat be eaten?" asked the astonished old black. "We whites," answered the missionary proudly, "do not eat human beings." "Well, then, what did you kill them for?" asked the cannibal in great amazement.

Timely Farm Questions

Answered at State College

QUESTION: When should poultry be vaccinated for chicken pox?

ANSWER: Young birds are more susceptible to pox than the adults so the proper time to vaccinate is when the birds are from ten to fifteen weeks old. Do not use pigeon pox virus at this time. Pull a few feathers from the thigh and rub the small brush, which comes with the vaccinating material, over the holes left by pulling the feathers. Be sure the brush has been dipped in the vaccinating solution. When once started, all birds on the farm, except the old hens which are probably resistant, should be vaccinated.

QUESTION: Is it necessary to plow up tobacco plant beds?

ANSWER: Yes—all beds should be plowed up and all plants destroyed immediately after use of the bed. These plants and beds furnish a breeding place for insect pests which will spread to the tobacco in the field and cause the loss of thousands of dollars worth of tobacco. After the plowing the bed should be planted to sweet potatoes or some other garden crop or it may be sown to soybeans.
