This Month On the Farm

JULY

Boliver Pigg, he sez, sez he: "Don't count too much on what may be: Remember that what's good costs work While troubles mostly all come free." -Sez Boliver P., sez he.

State College specialists offer the following suggestions to North Carolina farmers for the month of July:

Cotton
Agronomist Paul Kime says frequent cultivation of cotton during July is beneficial as it maintains a mulch that helps to hold the moisture. The cultivation should be shallow at all times in order to prevent injury to the root system. This also applies to corn and most other cultivated crops.

Vegetables
Robert Schmidt, Experiment Station horticulturist, has four suggestions for gardeners. First, he says, set tomatoes early in the month for a fall crop. And be sure to use wilt resistant varieties. Second, sow cabbage seed for a fall crop. The plant bed may need protection from the sun. Third, July is not too late to sow collard seed. Very often, the best winter collards are from late plantings. Fourth, fall crop Irish potatoes are usually planted during the latter part of July.

Poultry
Roy Dearstyne, head of the State College Poultry Department, says these hot summer days are trying both for the poultryman and his birds. To keep efficiency as near the top as possible, the poultryman is advised to follow these simple rules: Don't overcrowd your birds, and be sure to provide plenty of ventilation in the houses; provide an ample number of feed hoppers and water containers; cull at all times, destroying crippled and sub-normal birds; check lice and mite infestations; vaccinate against chicken pox; examine birds for intestinal parasites; feed a balanced diet; and collect and market eggs frequently.

Dairying
July is a bad month for dairy cows, says John Arey, extension dairyman, because of the annoyance from flies and the heat and variation in the quality and quantity of feed furnished by pastures. Since grazing in most permanent pastures gets short and tough during the summer, temporary grazing crops such as lespedeza and Sudan grass are needed as supplements. Unless they are provided, it will be necessary, in order to maintain a uniform milk flow, to feed silage and increase the protein content of the grain mixture to around 20 per cent. The grain allowance should be increased gradually as the quantity of grazing in the pasture diminishes.

Agronomy
Extension Agronomist Enos Blair says one of the most important jobs during July is threshing small grains on farms where they are not harvested with combines. In either case, after the grain is threshed, it should be stored in tight bins where it will be easy to treat with carbon bisulphide should grain moths and weevils attack. These pests usually make their appearance two to three weeks after the grain has been threshed. Blair also advises keeping the mowing machine busy until all weeds in the lespedeza field have been clipped off and until the pastures have been mown over.

Fruits
Dr. Luther Shaw, extension plant pathologist, suggests that apple growers should keep up their spray program during this period, since blotch and bitter rot usually make their appearance at this time of the year. Success in the control of these two diseases will depend upon the thoroughness and timeliness of the applications of cover sprays.

Flowers
The dahlia, one of the most popular of the fall flowers, requires close attention from the gardener at this season of the year, says James G. Weaver, State College horticulturist. During the growing season, the dahlia requires a large amount of water. If the plants continually wilt during the day and the soil seems dry, this indicates that transpiration and evaporation are in excess of absorption. So, water is needed to keep the balance more even. Plants suffering from lack of water will become hard and stunted, and, of course, cannot produce the best flowers. The best time to water dahlias is late in the afternoon.

NEWSPAPERS
A recent survey conducted in 35 states revealed that seven out of 10 farmers personally interviewed subscribed to a daily newspaper and more than half took a weekly.

Customer—Look here, butcher, you are giving me a big piece of bone. With meat as high as it is I don't want all that bone.
Butcher—I'm not giving it to you, mister; you're paying for it.
