School Items
No child with physical defects can do himself, his parents or teachers justice and frequently will be a repeater. This becomes an added expense to his school and the State.

Last year the Health Department made a physical survey of the school children of Franklin County. Six thousand one hundred and fifteen children were examined, white 3,780, colored 2,335; with one or more defects 4,809 white 78.6 per cent defective, 1,833 colored or 78.5 per cent.

The defects were as follows: White, Tonsils 1,200, teeth, 1,496, teeth need cleaning 866, over weight 187, under weight 1,240, pediculosis 90, skin 10, eyes 71. Colored, Tonsils 1,019, teeth 666, teeth need cleaning 466, over weight 151, under weight 630, skin 11, eyes 86. A record of these defects was made and given to each grade teacher, requesting that same be transmitted to the parents.

Teachers, if you did not notify parents you did not do your duty. Parents, if you did not do all you could to have these defects corrected you have failed in your duty to your children and cannot expect the best school work of them. Children do not come into this world of their own volition. It is their inalienable right that they have every possible attention given them to become strong mentally, morally and physically. Parents and teachers are responsible that they secure same. Parents and teachers are responsible that their children of pre-school age are entirely responsible for the proper training of them, but when children enter school, this responsibility is shared by the teachers.

'WAY BACK WHEN

by Jeanne

INVENTOR RAN BICYCLE REPAIR SHOP

THE seed of success is ambition, and Orville Wright was ambitious from early boyhood. He was born in Dayton, Ohio, in 1871, the youngest of five children, and as they grew up Orville and one of his older brothers, Wilbur, became inseparable. A highly respectable mid-western family, the father was a bishop of the United Brethren church and later publisher of a religious newspaper; but the family never had a lot of money. Orville Wright started to make money early in life, going about the neighborhood and collecting old bones to sell to a fertilizing plant. When he was fourteen, he published a school paper with a toy printing press. Later he made a press of his own and Wilbur improved it. Next he invented a paper folding machine for his father's print shop. He quit school in the third year of high school and, with Wilbur, started a weekly newspaper which lasted only three months. They then turned to job printing and later started a bicycle repair shop.

At about this time, they became interested in aviation and proceeded to construct the first heavier than air machine large enough to carry a man. As in their previous activities, Orville was the creative genius, Wilbur the perfecter. Their first successful flight was at Kitty Hawk, N. C., in 1903, and the success of aviation was assured when Orville made a flight lasting 62 minutes and 15 seconds, in 1908.

Total certification for payment and obligations under the 1938 Agricultural Adjustment Program amounted to $499,999.278 through June 30, 1939, the Triple-A has announced.
