Timely Farm Questions

Answered at State College

QUESTION: What lawn mixtures are adapted to different sections of the State?

ANSWER: For the coastal plain, a mixture of 2.6 pounds of Italian rye grass, 0.3 of a pound of white clover, and Bermuda grass root cuttings is recommended. For the piedmont and mountain sections, a mixture of 1.3 pounds of Kentucky blue grass 0.7 pounds of redtop, and 1.3 pounds of Italian rye grass is recommended. Each of these mixtures will seed 1,000 square feet of lawn.

QUESTION: When should beef cattle be bred?

ANSWER: It is advisable to allow the bull to run with the cow herd in May, June, and July, and the calves will all arrive in February, March, and April the following year. There are several advantages for having the calves come at this time of the year. Dry cows can be much more easily and cheaply wintered than cows nursing calves. Winter and early spring calves usually grow off faster and make better animals than calves dropped in the summer and fall. Calves dropped close together in the spring of the year can all be weaned at the same time. Their uniform ages makes it possible to pasture, house, and feed them together.

QUESTION: What is the nature of, and the control for, the rust which often attacks leaves and fruit of apples?

ANSWER: Rust is one of the oddest diseases affecting the apple. The parasite which causes this disease spends part of its life cycle on the apple and part on the common red cedar tree. The presence of both of these plants is essential to the existence of the rust parasite. Elimination of the red cedar trees for a distance of one-half mile or more from the orchard is the only practical method of controlling apple rust.
