NO RUBBER STAMP CONGRESS
 It doesn't look as if this is going to be a rubber stamp Congress, despite the President's precedent-breaking reelection. The final election returns were hardly in before Congress refused to adjourn—in the face of White House pressure—and passed the Walter-Logan Act, which is something the White House definitely did not want.

Significant point is that both these decisions were and could have been achieved only through a Republican coalition with a substantial number of Democrats. It is true beyond question that many Democratic congressmen are bothered by what they regard as a predisposition toward one man rule on the part of the President.

The President himself has thrown no bombshells since the election, and in his statements and press conferences has taken a moderate stand.

WHAT IS CAPITALISM?
 The head of one of America's largest banks recently had this to say concerning capitalism: "Business must have capital. What is capital? Savings. Whose savings? The people's, yours, your friends, your neighbors."

"Everyone who saves something from his earnings and puts that money to work, or has it put to work for him, is a capitalist."

"That is the American way, the way in which America has been built. Capitalism is democracy—at work."

That's simple, and it's sound. Capitalism is a term too often used to mislead the uninformed and create political discord. The truth is that capital is the collective invested savings of millions of people—the man with a hundred dollars, the woman with five hundred.

That's what the capital in the nation's banks consists of. The average bank deposit is small. But put millions of those accounts together and you get real money—the money that goes to build homes, to start businesses, to expand industries, to make jobs, and to do the thousand and one things necessary to keep American industry expanding and employing labor.

The nation's bankers are simply the custodians of this capital. They don't own it. They are hired managers, responsible to their depositors and controlled by the strictest kind of laws. It's their job to put it to work where it is safe—and where it will be employed in building up the wealth and the resources and the economic and social values of America. The great majority of American families are capitalists. There future security depends on invested savings in industries, in life insurance, in land, etc. Any political trend which weakens our private enterprise system, strikes at individual savings—capital.
