Back The Attack With Third War Loan Bonds.

Growers will be unable to harvest the cotton crop with the labor that is now on the farm. Additional pickers are needed and all should help in harvesting this vital war crop.

The total volume of forest products in 1943 will fall below military needs and essential civilian requirements. Farmers will need to cut additional lumber, logs, and pulpwood.

Optimism At Henderson

Henderson, Sept. 6.—Optimism prevades the Henderson tobacco market as the seven big Henderson warehouses prepare for the opening of the seventy-fifth year of the Middle Belt's second largest tobacco market next Monday, according to Arthur H. Surprise, sales supervisor of the Henderson market.

Averages for the 1943 season will surprise most farmers, Surprise believes. The strong prices on lower grade leaf on the earlier markets indicates that while drought has lowered quality, prices will be higher, grade for grade, than in 1942's banner market year.

Slower marketing will be a great benefit to the farmer, who will get his leaf on the floor in better shape and will have time to save his cotton and feed crops, Surprise says.

Henderson's golden anniversary market is the second largest in the Middle Belt and is one of the oldest of all leaf auction markets, being established in 1868. Henderson has seven big warehouses and with two sets of buyers surpassed all other Middle Belt markets in poundage and cash paid out in the 1942 season. The management of the Henderson warehouses is unchanged from last year.

First day sales will be at High Price, Farmers, Carolina and Big Henderson warehouses.

SOIL CONSERVATION NEWS

By W. O. Lambeth

O. R. Radford, Franklinton, Rout No. 2, tried the wide and narrow row arrangement on two acres of tobacco this year.

Mr. Radford prepared his land last spring by plowing beds eight feet wide throughout the field. He then opened a furrow with a middle-burster on top of each bed and put in one-half the fertilizer he planned to use on the entire field. A broad round top ridge was thrown on this furrow with a turning plow. The rest of the fertilizer was then put down in the two ridging furrows which were two feet apart. The fertilizer in these two rows or furrows was covered with a turning plow moving part of the original ridge in the center of the bed to make a smooth, level surface on which to set the plants. The plants were thus set out on these rows which were two feet apart with a space of six feet to the next row on the adjoining bed. In other words Mr. Radford had when he finished, a wide six foot row and a narrow two foot row. Mr. Radford says that the chief advantages he can see to this plan is that you have a broad bed which protects the plants from the loss of two much moisture in dry weather and also provides ample drainage in wet weather. Then there is a better distribution of the fertilizer and more room to work the plants and harvest the crop from the six foot rows (the two foot rows are never cultivated).

This row arrangement was originated by H. A. McGee, Tobacco Specialist of the Clemson College Extension Service of South Carolina, and has worked very well in sections where it has been tried. In 1941 demonstrations were set up on eight South Carolina farms and the tobacco planted on this wide and narrow row plan produced an average of 440 pounds per acre more than tobacco planted on the same farms in rows of uniform width.

Gulfport County is doing a good job in beef cattle work, twenty steers are being fed by 4-H club boys.
