FARM QUESTION BOX

ED W. MITCHELL Farm Advisor General Electric Station WGY

Q. Does barley make a good feed for hens and pigs?

A. Barley is a close second to wheat for general feeding purposes, a little lower in protein, but higher in carbohydrates and fat.

Q. What is the best time of year to transplant raspberry bushes?

A. The best time is early in the spring; the next best time is late October. Chop off a piece of root with a sprout or sucker, and transplant promptly before it can get dried out.

Q. What dressing is best for grass land to be used for hay?

A. Superphosphate or some combination of nitrogen and phosphorus (Amos-Phos). In general, 300 pounds per acre every two or three years is profitable.

Q. How are eggs preserved in water glass?

A. To nine quarts of boiled, soft water in a clean, sterile crock add one quart of water glass and put the eggs in and cover with a tight paper or lid. Use only fresh, sterile, clean eggs and do not wash or wipe them because this procedure removes the protective "bloom."

Q. When are okra pods ripe enough to be picked?

A. The long, green pods are the edible portion and are best when young, tender and freshly picked. Pick them when they are as large as a finger.

Q. How can tomato seeds be saved?

A. Let tomatoes ripen, then store them in a shallow box where they will rot but will not heat and mold much. When they are well disintegrated, crush them in a tub of water and scoop out the seeds with a wire strainer. Dry the seeds and store them in a cool, dry place.

Q. Should there always be an opening in the roof of a poultry house?

A. Hinge the top board of a shed-roof type of house and use windows in gable ends of a gable-roof type. These methods are better than running a ventilator through the roof.
