YOUNGVILLE SCHOOL NEWS

By M. K. Carswell, Prin.

Since some of the teachers attended the state wide meeting of the NCEA at Raleigh last week, we are thinking of the professional side of our work in the schools. Many of us are inclined to forget the importance of our growth as teachers and school workers in a time like this; but it is a time of need for our best effort. Many teachers are going from the schools to other work, few—almost none—of the young people are preparing to teach, and people in general are very busy with other things. Furthermore, many of the students are leaving school to accept jobs. By talking with teachers, and reading the papers we find these conditions to be very general.

But we are now concerned mostly with the problems near home. How may teachers help the conditions, and how may the patrons help the children to attend school, and to become educated even in time of war? The general answer is that the teachers and parents should co-operate fully and completely. The more specific answer is somewhat difficult. Teachers have the task of keeping pupils interested in their studies. It is necessary to make school life and work attractive. This requires much time in study of the problems of the pupils and parents. The students must be given a reason for study and an incentive to work. One speaker at Raleigh last week suggested that students be invited to help plan their work and activities. We have done this to some extent, and experience seems to prove that it pays. We have some teachers who can use pupil participation in planning work and school activities, but we have a long way to go before we can use it successfully in all things. This seems to suggest more study and research on our part.

The parent's part in educating the children is just as difficult as the teacher's part. Recently we had a boy to decide to quit school and go to work. The father talked with us about it, but our conclusion was to the effect that there was not much we could do about it. The parents also have the problem of farm labor shortage.

The conclusion of the matter seems to recommend at least two things: Study and careful planning by teachers and other educators, and planning together by parents and teachers for the best possible means of educating the children. The P. T. A. truly has

ABC Coupons

The present ABC ration of liquors—a half-pint per coupon—will remain in force through April, and there is no immediate prospect of an increase, Chairman Carl Williamson of the State ABC Board, announced Monday.

The increase in the Federal tax on whiskey will become effective April 1. The new tax will be $9 per hundred proof gallon, as compared with the present tax of $6.

Prices of all affected products handled by ABC stores will be increased to include the increased tax. As an example, Williamson cited Rocking Chair whiskey, which now sell in ABC stores for $2.25 a fifth. The new price on this brand will be $2.85 a fifth.
