More Louisburg Women Work

New York--The number of women in the labor force in Louisburg is on the rise.

The old saw that woman's place is in the home is being widely disregarded. With every passing year a larger proportion of the female population is to be found in the business, industrial and professional worlds.

Married women are responsible for most of this increase. More and more of them are finding it possible to discharge their home responsibilities and still have enough time left to take jobs, part-time or full-time.

On the basis of the latest Government figures, approximately 44.4 percent of Louisburg's female population, above age 14, is now in the labor force. When compared with the proportion of working women in the United States as a whole, 34.5 percent, this is high. It tops, also, the State of North Carolina's 37.5 percent.

The figures are from reports of the Department of Commerce, adjusted to March, 1964, in line with new data on the labor force, compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

In Louisburg, at the present time, the number of women in the local labor force is estimated at 533. Close to 94 percent of them are actually employed.

The great bulk of them are married women. They have been entering the labor market at a rapid rate. For the most part it has been after age 35, by which time their youngsters are well along in school.

Their object is to bolster family earnings so as to prepare for the heavy education costs facing them and, at the same time, to keep themselves busy.

Making it possible, nowadays, is the vast array of appliances and semi-prepared foods that make housework less than a full-time occupation.

The combined earnings of these women has reached more than $28 billion a year.

Overall, according to the National Industrial Conference Board, such families spend 25 percent more than one-income families.

In Louisburg, according to the latest count, 40.7 percent of all local jobs are held by women. The average, for the United States, is 32.7 percent, and for the State of North Carolina, 35.0 percent.
