About Your Home

Free-growing trees and shrubs should be used for privacy more often than they are. There are a few tricks in planting the trees and shrubs to best advantage.

One common fault is not using enough curve to create an attractive structure for the garden.

If it is not possible to screen out everything objectionable from all points in the garden, decide on the most important spots to have privacy. This important spot is quite often the view from the living room windows or an outdoor terrace.

When planning to use free-standing trees and shrubs, it is very important to first inquire as to the mature size and rate of growth of each of the varieties you choose and plant accordingly. If you choose a tree or shrub that will greatly exceed its position and then try to keep it down to size by pruning, you will distort its natural grace and beauty.

Be sure the trees and shrubs you choose are well-suited culturally. The plants should grow well in the type of soil you have and with the amount of moisture you plan to give them.

One side of a garden might be shady and the other sunny. One might be drier than the other. In your planting of free-growing shrubs you can make allowances for this. But a hedge, all of one kind of shrub, will look lovely where it is suited culturally and ratty where unsuited culturally.

Encourage your child to paint. Many psychologists have said for a long time that painting is one of the surest ways to help a child express his feeling for beauty. Your encouragement and interest in his work will make your child feel a real part of the home. It will also help him to meet the adult world on his own terms.

Suitably framed, your child's picture will be an interesting addition to almost any room in your home. At worst it will be a conversation piece.

By encouraging children to create, you are helping them to a fuller, richer life. The joy their child will get from having one of his pictures beautifully framed and being in the home will be reward enough to most parents.

It is important for the parents to understand that it does not matter what your child paints nor how accurately. That comes later. At first the rhythm and balance is what counts. Your child will want to please you most of all, so keep this in mind.

If your child cannot attend a class, he can paint at home. The necessary materials are few. All he will need is: construction paper, 18 inches by 24 inches in assorted colors, a set of poster paints, bristle brushes in 1 inch, 1/2 inch, and 1/4 inch sizes and a cup of water for cleaning the brushes.

Perhaps the most important side of all this is that painting will help your child to see more beauty. He will learn to see beauty in such simple things as rocks, tree trunks, and the way paint peels off of old wood.
