were jumping to keep from freezing to death. Never have understood how it is that folks stand on the sidelines with five overcoats while these sweet young things parade right out in the open without their long-johns.

Jessie Ray looked good. So did the girls. They were all dressed up. Made a real pretty sight sitting there on the review stand. Charlie Craven went over to interview little Jan. We couldn't hear what she told him... but old stone-face had to smile at that cutie. She was a doll as she tried on her daddy's hat. Looked better on her than it did on him. But, after all she's prettier than Robert anyway.

Charlie Dunn walked around the view stand with his coat collar turned up. He was practicing his new job as an investigator. Trouble was that Charlie was the most suspicious looking character there. He might have been looking for Bob Morgan. That open-convertible planner had planned Bob to sit back of Jim Graham. This would make anybody hard to find. There was one reporter standing on the platform wearing a thin summer-weight coat. He was wearing pants, too, of course. But this shows how underpaid we are. He was strong-willed. Most of his inspiration came with the appearance of the majorettes. He seemed to warm up at those times.

The television folks took over. They're the prima donnas of the business. The director couldn't get the cameraman to switch away from the majorettes. He had trouble especially when one cold young thing came by in a bright gold tight-fitting outfit. Wonder if the cameraman got fired after the last commercial?

Meanwhile young Robert played with his top hat. He smiled. He shook hands and posed for 2564 pictures. He posed with Dan. He posed with Terry. He posed with the Governor of South Carolina and Virginia. He posed with a cigar and he posed without it. He posed with Jim Graham and he posed without Jim Graham.

As the National Guard passed in review... after standing in the cold six hours... and after months of practice... and all that lost pay in their civilian jobs... young Robert missed it all. He was busy posing with some beauty queen. He did see some of the tanks and some of the troops and he applauded them. Mostly the smoke from that cigar got in his eyes and the new sideburns kept getting tangled.

All in all, it was quite a day. Plain old everyday folks don't often get the chance to stand inside a nice warm building and watch the wheels freezing outside. This was a time when the outsiders were inside looking out. But, one would suspect that things will not remain so for long.

We hear that young Robert ended up with the sniffles and this ain't at all surprising when you remember that he said this would be an open-door administration. Anybody who'd leave any door open cold as it is can't be all bad. And they can't be expected to miss a few sniffles now and then. Sniffle. Sniffle.
