What's It?

Tobacco Tax Battle Lines Drawn

Battle lines seem to be drawn in the upcoming attempts in the General Assembly to place a tax on cigarettes. Latest to join in the tussle are the county and state units of the Farm Bureau.

The Directors of Franklin County Farm Bureau have urged all tobacco producers and consumers to consider with great concern the additional tax proposal of five cents to be put on each package of cigarettes, which they point out, are already subject to 3% general sales tax.

Cigarette taxes are already more than five times as much as tobacco grower's receipts for the tobacco used in domestically consumed cigarettes, a spokesman said.

"All of a sudden, tobacco has become a luxury in the minds of some of our North Carolina Representatives, and if demands for increased revenue continue, what products will be next to be taxed for state revenue purposes?" he asked.

"If further decrease in cigarette consumption caused by anti-smoking forces and increased state and local taxes are heaped upon our heads--You can be assured the farmers will be affected in many ways; reducing the amount of tobacco he can produce, reducing his income and purchasing power, etc.," he continued.

He urged all interested persons to write to Governor Bob Scott immediately and state their opposition to any further tax on tobacco.

B. C. Mangum, president of the North Carolina Farm Bureau, placed most of the blame for the promotion of the tax on urban lawmakers and said their actions were "rash and arbitrary."

"Instead of thrashing around for an additional source of revenue," Mangum cautioned, "it might be wise to give a measure of thought to economic principles, rather than how easily a particular tax can be administered. Certainly, advocates of a tobacco tax have not given proper consideration to the effect such a levy would have on our total economy."

"For the first time in the history of tobacco production in this country the sale of tobacco products declined in 1968," the farm leader revealed. Higher tax rates on cigarettes in a number of states is given as the main reason.

Mangum noted that "it is simply not true that people will go on smoking no matter how much it costs them. He supported his statement with facts contained in a study by the University of Kentucky and the University of Illinois which disclosed that each price increase of 10 percent was accompanied by a five percent drop in consumption. "If the trend continues," he ventured, "the economy of tobacco regions of the nation is in deep trouble."

"North Carolina's farm-based economy is frequently singled out as a contributing factor to our low per capita income. "Why," Mangum reasoned, "place an additional strain on a commodity which accounts for 42 percent of the state's total farm income. A tobacco tax can jeopardize the livelihood of some 300,000 farmers and industrial workers in North Carolina alone. No other state is so dependent upon a single product."

Mangum pointed out that North Carolina is already receiving taxes equivalent to six cents per package on cigarettes. Tobacco processors and manufacturers pay to the state over $31 million yearly in corporate, franchise, local property, income and sales taxes.
