Let me caution right here, however, that we cannot expect new tax laws in he next few weeks or months. Our tax laws are so complex and they have been made so much more complicated by various court and internal revenue service rulings that it will take some time to rewrite them adequately and equitably. It may actually be next year or even longer before final action can be taken. Loopholes are not easy to plug, even when every effort is made to do so, and they are certainly much more difficult if they were created by

Widespread public opinion is so necessary to help us get better tax laws and more equitable treatment for all. The mere fact that hearings have begun, however, is reason enough to be optimistic

Let me go through just a few of the questions the committee will explore. Are the wealthy tax-exempt foundations treated more favorably than you or I? Do they get to write off certain income as tax exempt while a private citizen or business is not allowed the same privilege? If the answer to these and other related questions is yes, then the next among the really important questions is why. What is the justification?

Are some charitable religious organizations given special treatment on the taxability of income not related to their originally-stated activities? Should the business holdings of the various denominations not related to their religious activities be taxed the same as private business?
Should losses on farming operations by persons who engage in farming primarily to avoid taxes be allowed to continue?

Should the regular standard deduc tion -- now 10 percent up to $1,000 for most families -- be increased? If so, in what manner.

Hurricanes Go To Lenoir Today In Quest Of Region Title

morning and a shot at the Region Ten title and a trip to Hutchinson, Kansas for the national title. "Attitude", said Coach Enid Drake, 4 will play a major part in our success. If the players are satisfied with what they have already won,

The 'Canes, winners of the Cavalier-Tarheel Conference title and last week's tournament played at Elizabeth City, will have a bye in opening round play tonight along with top-seeded Gardner-Webb of Boiling Springs, N.

The 'Canes will meet the winner of the Kittrell College (of Vance County) and Spartanburg (S.C.) Junior College Friday night at 7 P.M. Gard-ner-Webb will play the winner of the Ferrum-Isothermal Community College in he nightcap Friday. The championship game is slated for 8 P.M. Saturday. Drake is pleased with the pairings because he feels his cagers will have a good chance against either Kittrell or Spartansburg. "Isothermal College is real tough", he "Kittrell good height with one boy and weighing 259 pounds, another at 6'6" and a guard, who is their high scorer at 6'1".

Region Ten encompa North and South Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia. Kittrell is indepent; Spartans-burg was the Western Caro-linas Junior College Conference runner-up and Gardner-Webb was the champion of the same league. Louisburg won the Cavalier-Tarheel conference title and tournament with Ferrum being the run-ner-up in both and Isothermal represents the Community College division.

Gardner-Webb is favored to win. They feature Artis Gilmore, a 7:2" center and have lost only the Wake Forest Frosh, Brevard and Indian River (Bla.)

"I hope we get a shot at Gardner-Webb" Drake said. "It will take a real good

The Louisburg College Hurricanes left for Lenoir this | well, that could be it. If they still want more . . . ". He tapered off and fell short of making a firm prediction.

However, Drake, a realist among basketball coaches, makes it apparent that he believes his charges are capable of taking all effort on our part. One poor game and it's all over at this

The Region Ten Tournament is a popular event in Lenoir and the facilities there are already taxed to handle the fans. The event is sponsored by the local Shriners and has become extremely successful, according to reports.

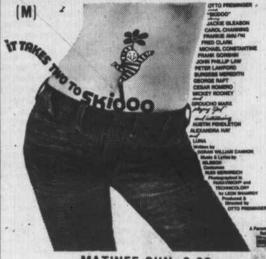

The 'Canes will work out this afternoon. Drake says all players are well and in good shape for the games.
