Distaff Deeds

(News items this week from Durham, Caswell, Wayne and Polk counties.)

Priceless Antique

An antiques trunk belonging to Mrs. Burma Dunnegan was one of the most admired items at the Durham County fair this year.

When the trunk that belonged to her grandparents was given to her, Mrs. Dunnegan decided to put the refinishing skills she learned in Extension workshops to good use. She antiqued the body of the trunk a rust ivory and preserved the natural walnut woodwork of the frame. For the inside lining, she used a shocking blue corduroy.

When Mrs. Mary J. Whitmore, assistant home economics Extension agent, asked the homemaker to put a price on the trunk, the lady said, "I couldn't do that. This trunk represents a lot of hard work, cherished memories and love."

Proud of Quilt

After three winters of work, Mrs. A. L. Meeler, Leasburg, has a quilt she can be proud of.

The Caswell County homemaker's quilt features over 1,600 squares of cotton fabric, sewn together into a cathedral window design.

Mrs. Meeler is going to use the quilt as a bedspread and is planning to make a bolster cover to match, Donna Pointer, assistant home economics Extension agent, reports.

Inspires Family

After seeing what 4-H'er Kay Keen, Wayne County, did to improve her room, the family decided other rooms in the house needed sprucing up, too.

While enrolled in a "room improvement" project, Kay painted her bedroom and made colorful draperies and a bedspread. The family concluded that the boys room, master bedroom and den could use a face-lifting, too.

Kay will take the leadership during the rest of the renovating, Mrs. Sarah T. Jones, home economics Extension agent, notes.

Unusual Ornaments

With bits of ribbon, string, braid and beads, empty thread spools and egg cartons can be made into attractive Christmas tree ornaments, points out Anna J. Fitzgerald, home economics Extension agent, Polk County.

In a workshop conducted by Mrs. Martin Belsiegel, Extension Homemakers Club members learned to make these unusual ornaments for their fall bazaar, the agent reports.
