Changes In Inspection

According to T. F. Zweigart, State Veterinarian, there have been some changes regarding the inspection of feeding and breeding swine for movement from farm-to-farm and farm-to-market which applies to Franklin County swine producers.

Following the quarantine of all swine in North Carolina on July 28, 1969 provisions was made to allow the movement of feeding and breeding swine from farm-to-farm and farm-to-market-to-farm. A requirement was put into effect that all swine on the premises from which swine are moved be examined by an accredited veterinarian or other representative of the State Veterinarian.

It was requested that, except where a private arrangement is made with a practicing veterinarian, an application for a permit be submitted to the County Extension Office at least ten days in advance. In many cases advance notice has not been given. This imposes burdens on those persons making the inspections. They are not able to plan their regular work or schedule the inspection.

This has endangered the inspection program. Some inspectors will not be able to continue working under the present circumstances.

Effective December 8, 1969 free inspections will not be made unless a signed application requesting inspection is in the County Extension Office of the county where the swine to be examined are located at least seven days in advance.

The above applies to free inspection only. Some individuals may wish to deal directly with their practicing veterinarians and make arrangements to have the inspections made at their own expense.

"The free inspection system has worked very well in reducing the spread of hog cholera. I hope all persons depending on it will cooperate to the extent that the service will not have to be discontinued in any area," commented J. R. Shillinglaw.

Three Varieties Added To Flue-Cured Lineup

The addition of three new flue-cured varieties will give North Carolina tobacco growers a wider selection to choose from as they buy seed this winter for next year's crop.

Added to the growing list of available varieties this year are Coker 213, McNair 133 and Speight G-28. All three compared favorably with established varieties in two years of tests in different locations in the state.

The tests were conducted by North Carolina State University.

One of the most significant contributions the new lines are expected to make is in the area of disease resistance. All three carry resistance to some of the most important flue-cured diseases.

Coker 213 has high resistance to black shank and fusarium wilt and moderate resistance to Granville wilt.

McNair 133 has high resistance to brown spot and Granville wilt and low resistance to fusarium.

Speight G-28 carries high resistance to black shank and Granville wilt and moderate resistance to fusarium wilt. In addition, it carries resistance to root knot nematode and is moderately tolerant of brown spot.

The three new releases were among 15 tested in 1968 and 1969 in the NCSU Official Variety Tests. They have met regional minimum standards for new flue-cured varieties and will be available for planting for the first time during the 1970 crop year.

Each of the three varieties produced almost 2,300 pounds of tobacco per acre in the two-year tests. The value per acre was $1,615 for McNair, $1,570 for Coker and $1,568 for Speight. The range for all 15 varieties tested was $1,738 to $1,530 per acre.

A quality index was obtained on all varieties tested by scoring each on the basis of color, body and texture. The range for all 15 was 32.2 (best) to 37.2 (lowest).

The new varieties were scored like this (low figures indicates better quality): Coker 213, 36.5; McNair 133, 34.1; and Speight G-28, 35.5. The best index was given NC 2326 and Speight G-7. Each received a 32.2.

The height of the three new varieties was 42 inches for Speight G-28, 49 inches for McNair 133 and 50 inches for Coker 213. The Coker variety flowered in 55 days and the other two required 53 days each.

Flue-cured growers may obtain detailed information on all varieties available for planting from their county extension agent.
