of the opening of the exposition, of the leading part North Carolina had taken and of the courtesies that had been extended Governor Jarvis and the ladies of his party are by invitation of ex-Governor Bigelow and General E. S. Greeley.

The preliminary notices of the exhibit which had been published by the press of Beston before opening day, and the fame of Governor Jarvis as a wise commonwealth and the officers of the Institute, but also the people at large to meet him with a cordial greeting. But when it was known that Governor Jarvis would be accompanied by his wife and by the widow and daughter of Stonewall Jackson the enthusiasm of all the intelligent people of Massachusetts was aroused, for, strange as it may seem to some few of your readers, the people of the North have learned from the precepts and practice of their Union veterans to hold the memories of Lee and Jackson in a regard second only to that which pervades the hearts and minds of us Southerners. - CE

This is the age of steam and electricity. Thoughts travel, ideas change, and batreds are eliminated with a rapidity that would have made the ers, and the evidences of the impression he then made may be found in all the newspapers of that goodly State which produces granite and brainy men. While on this trip the North Carolinians were taken to the Amoskeag Mills, where they saw 6,000 operatives employed, 6,000 looms in operation and an immense number of spindles in lively motion. After seeing mills and fair the party was taken to the Hotel Windsor, where an elegant collection was served. Sea-food, game, fruit-ices, champagne and all other things that tempt the fastidious palate were on the tables. That day. Lord Chief Justice Coleridge arrived and Mrs. T. J. Jackson and her daughter Miss Julia. The next morning all breakfasted together in the "Elm City" of Connecticut, where the elegant private dining room of the Revere, Governor Butler presiding as host, and making Mrs. Jackson his most highly honored guest.
