The guests then visited the various rooms and lingered long in the studio. Except that the present building is of brick, with large ventilating flues, and heated by steam, there is no difference between it and the former one, finished and occupied during the exposition of 1884, and examined by many visitors to the city as well as by residents of Raleigh. It may not be needless, however, to give a brief desixty-six feet by forty-five. It contains study and recitation rooms for the primary and preparatory departments, cloak-rooms, a large gymnasium, a laboratory for physics, and the studio. This last, a noble gallery sixty-four feet long by twenty-six wide, is lighted by four sky-lights; the open ceiling is .nished in oiled woods, and the whole forms the most beautiful studio for school purposes in the South. St. Mary's and the State are certainly to be congratulated upon the possession of a structure so artistic in its plan and so complete in all its appointments.
