The workingman of America is not content with mean lodging, scant clothes and poor food, or is it desirable that he should be. Let us then help to make something better. Shall this be left entirely to chance, individual effort, the uncertain methods of the past? I think a large part of the workmen in any given trade do not serve an apprenticeship nowadays, and of those whose do, few are properly prepared when they begin. llow many farmers understand the structure and needs of the crops they raise, to say nothing of the weeds that grow between, the soil beneath or the cattle that feed on them?

At any rate, it seems to be conceded that something else is needed, as is evidenced by the number of industrial schools that have been opened in the past few years. In my opinion this movement has not gone so far as to be so fully developed that improvement can come only through modification in the detail of an accepted plan. Indeed, I am afraid that most industrial institutions are radically wrong. They are not meant to educate chemists or geologists or engineers, but to make a first-W. Those are for his professors, for observers whose telephone case does not touch its scienscientific as well as practical attain- tific bearings, but simply submits these ments, if any distinction can be made questions to re-examination before a agriculturist.

The mechanical trades are numerous, and each should have its special course of instruction.

The subjects of instruction in this girls too, who have previously acquired he elements of a common school education and of such age as would fit them to enter on the practical acquirement of trade. Their instructors, overseers, &c., should be persons selected according to law for their fitness and capacity. They should be masters of their several trades or professions.

The apprentices should enter bound to the State for a certain course of instruction or for a term of years. They would be at the disposal of the State during their term of apprenticeship and all products of their labor would accrue to the treasury of the university. They would be allowed to enter for a special occupation or in a general class under obligation to choose or be assigned at the end of a certain time a special calling, to the perfect mastery of which all it will answer the purpose. The interfurther instruction should be directed and subordinated. Parallel with practical instruction would be continued general and technical education. A course of physical development in directions not given by the particular trades would be established and enforced. Ample facilities for general reading should be provided and a certain amount quired and strictly enforced. Apprentices should not be permitted to withdraw from the university or production of these qualities among her change a course of technical instruction once begun, except upon good cause to

of reading, including standard English literature, history, &c., should be reof the institution. Upon the satisfactory completion of prescribed course a certificate of proficiency would be given the apprentice and he would be discharged from the school in the position of a journeyman workman.

Advanced courses for those who wished to pursue them, as well as scholarships for those students who exhibit marked superiority or aptitude for higher instruction would, in time, be established, so that facilities would be given to those who were industrious and rewards offered to those who were ambitious and deserving.

A reasonable code of rewards and punishments should be established and rigidly adhered to.

The amounts and manner of payment for instruction in each course could be regulated by law.

An institution founded upon these principles and developed in accordance with them would, I think, in time give the youth of the State the best possible opportunity of acquiring a trade and would give the State the largest return in uniformly excellent artisans, sober and industrious citizens.
