el-Bahari. Consigned to the museum stores, the mummy decayed and gave out so foul an odor that it became necessary to get rid of it. It was accordingly opened, and proved to have been bandaged very carefully; but the body was no sooner exposed to the outer air than it fell literally into a state of putrefaction, dissolving into black matter which gave out an insupportable smell. It was, however, ascertained to be the corpse of a woman of mature age and middle height, belonging to the white race of mankind. There was no trace of writing on the bandages, but a small strip of linen was discovered in the sarcophagus. No. 5,247 was decorated with a scene of adoration of King Rameses III, in the likeness of two forms of Amen. A short legend, written partly in hieroglyphs and partly in hieratic, states that the piece of linen thus decorated was "the gift of the lion laundress of the royal household, and it was accordingly supposed that the anonymous mummy was one of the many sisters, wives or daughters of Rameses III. The mummy No. 5,229 was very neatly wrapped in orange-colored linen, kept in place by small strips of ordinary linen. There was no outer inscription, but upon the head was a linen band covered with mystical figures. M. Maspero here reminded his Highness the Khedive that Nofretari is represented upon certain monuments as of a black complexion, while upon other monuments she is seen with a yellow skin and with the soft hair of an Egyptian woman. Hence there have arisen innumerable discussions among Egyptologists, some affirming that the Queen was a negress, while others maintain that the black tint of her face and body was a fiction originating with the priests. The worship of this Queen was extremely popular at Thebes, where she was deified under one of the forms of Hathor, the black goddess, the goddess of death and of the shades. The opening of the mummy No. 5,229 would, therefore, probably settle this historical question for good and all. G. MASPERO. Given at Boulak, June 3, 1886.
